Compromise On Arms Aid Is Denied by State Dept.

Report of Belief $1½ Billion Total Might Be Halved Brings Statement

Limit Sought on 'Hill'

By Murrey Marder
Post Reporter

New Capitol Hill reports that the Administration is convinced it must partially retreat from its $1,450,000,000 foreign arms program were denied last night by the State Department.

In a statement aimed at news reports that Senate GOP leaders "believe" the Administration may reluctantly agree to accept legislation for about half its requested cash outlay, State Department Press Officer Michael J. McDermott said:

"No 'compromise' for the arms bill is being considered. Secretary of State Acheson said this week that the Administration feels that when its case has been fully presented to Congress, Congress will approve and vote the full sum."

Unlikely to Be Stilled

It seemed unlikely, however, that such statements would completely still the reports that the Administration will eventually agree to a less costly plan to help rearm Western European members of the North Atlantic Treaty and several other nations.

Behind the calls for a shorter, cheaper arms aid plan and the Administration's seemingly "stand pat" attitude is this unusual situation:

Few members of Congress are opposed in principle to the theory of placing weapons in the hands of friendly non-Communist nations. Besides, on the purely political level, such opposition would be a boomerang should hostilities develop.

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), and Senator John Foster Dulles (R., N. Y.), whose foreign policy views carry much weight among Republicans, were stanch advocates of the North Atlantic Treaty and favor some measure of arms aid.

They believe that the proposed aid, however, is too large an amount at this time.

But they also feel that opposition to the Administration's program may result in no program at all in the little time remaining in this session of Congress, which they would regard as serious error.

Democrats Share View

Several Democratic leaders share this view, but cannot easily say so publicly.

In addition, many Congressmen believe that the bill itself is not tied to any realistic "plan," and also feel it contains dangerously broad presidential authority.

Rather than being disheartened

Getting D. C. Divorce Hard as Falling Off Log 2500 Decrees Being Granted Here Yearly

By Bill Brinkley

First of A Series

"Till death us do part . . ."

The other day District Court here granted a divorce to a man and woman married and separated the same day.

"Love her, comfort her, honor and keep her . . ."

The other day District Court granted a divorce to a woman who testified her husband had the habit of coming home every morning at 4 o'clock, dragging her out of bed, beating her and once even knifing her.

"To have and to hold from this day forward . . ."

Not long ago a divorce was sought in District Court based on failure of husband and wife to share the marriage bed. The judge demurred with the declaration he would have to divorce half the population of Washington if he gave out decrees merely because husbands and wives didn't sleep together.

The magnitude of divorce here is breathtaking:

Divorce actions make up between 40 and 50 per cent of District Court's civil business.

In one three-day stretch recently, the court granted 132 uncontested divorces—at a rate of 5 to 10 minutes a throw. Some took only 2 minutes.

So jampacked is the court calendar that if you file an answer to a contested divorce today, it won't be heard for 17 months. Over 2000 divorce

A blessed coolness swept into the Washington area last night to break the 15-day heat wave and end the chain of deaths and prostrations which had marked the sweltering city's sufferings from high temperatures.

A man and a woman died from the heat yesterday and 12 were prostrated before the relief came between 7 and 8 p. m.

After the mercury had stayed above or close to the 90 mark from noon to 7 p. m., clouds, followed by rain, dropped the tempearture 12 degrees in an hour. The rainfall began about 8 p. m., and was continued through the evening.

Trees and Wires Down

Gusty winds preceding the rain brought to police more than a score of reports of trees and wires down. Weather observers said there were gusts of wind at velocities up to 45 miles per hour.

By midnight, an estimated .22 of an inch of rain had fallen at the National Airport weather station, although more apparently came in some other parts of the Washington area. The temperature stayed at 75 through the late evening.

The Government weather forecast was for a low temperature of 72 degrees during the night with mostly sunny weather today, less hot and humid, high temperature in the upper eighties.

Up 5 Degrees in Hour

The temperature reached a low point of 78 degrees at 4:32 a. m. yesterday, but rose through the eighties, reaching 90 at noon. Then it jumped 5 degrees in an hour, but by 5 p. m. had receded to 88. That was the beginning.

The man who died from the heat was Earl Lucas, 44, of 258 Division ave. ne. He was brought to Gallinger Hospital Friday evening and died at 2:15 a.m. Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, ascribed his death to thermic fever.

The woman who died was Mrs. Carrie DuVall, 79, 1610 16th st. nw. Her son, Edwin L. Duvall, returned to the home and was about to prepare dinner for his mother when he found she was unconscious in her chair. She was pronounced dead on arrival at Emergency Hospital.

Those Prostrated

Those who were prostrated, according to police and hospital records were:

Emanuel Weiss, 65, 926 New York ave. nw., taken to Emergency Hospital from 413 I st. nw., condition good.

Gertrude Fleeman, 57, Narrows, Va., treated at Emergency Hospital and released.

Alvin Fyild, 56, 2134 G st. nw., in serious condition at Emergency Hospital.

Two Planes Crash Over New Jersey; Witnesses Blame Hellcat's Stunting

Fort Dix, N. J., July 30 (AP). Sixteen persons were killed today as a Weashington-bound airliner was chopped apart in the New Jersey skies by what witnesses described as a stunting Navy fighter plane.

The airliner's left wing and tail were shorn off, and the crippled Eastern Air Lines DC-3 whirled into a farmer's field and burst into flame. The Navy plane burrowed into the ground 2 miles away.

The charred bodies of 12 passengers and 3 crew members were strewn throughout the wreckage of the airliner. The pilot of the Navy plane, Lieut. Robert Vernon Poe, Fairfax, Va., was found dead in a field beside an unopened parachute.

State police said they had reports from two witnesses who saw the planes tangle high in the sky over the Fort Dix military reservation.

'Plane Took 3 Turns'

One was the pilot of a Piper Cub who said the Navy fighter had buzzed his little craft and "stood me on my right wing for an instant" just before zooming into the airliner.

"The small plane appeared to strike the airliner on the left side just aft of the left wing," the pilot, George Humphries, of Fairhaven, N. J., told investigators.

"Parts of the airplane were all over the siky, and I veered to my right. I saw the aircraft strike the ground amid a cloud of dust and flames."

Another witness, Farmer Harry Miller, said he saw the fighter take the tail off the airliner and send it into a spin.

"The big plane took three turns and then the wing fell off," he said.

Other Complaints Made

Pilots of two other commercial planes complained later at Miami that their airliners also had been "buzzed" by Navy aircraft over the New Jersey area today.

A National Air Lines pilot said three Navy craft had swerved in front of his plane 2½ hours before the fatal crash. Another Eastern Air Lines pilot said his plane had been buzzed at about that same time some 25 miles from Fort Dix. Both statements were made in the pilots' report to their airlines.

The two-engined airliner, bound from Boston to Memphis, plowed open a wide ditch as it ground into a mass in an alfalfa field.

Farmers who ran to the rescue said the crash was followed by an explosion and a wall of flame

Perfume Story Denial Refused By Maragon

Tells Press to See Records on Alleged Smuggling Attempt

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Smiling John Maragon, without his usual grin, yesterday refused to deny that in 1946 he tried to bring in valuable perfume essence under the guise of champagne.

The one-time Kansas City bootblack made this statement to reporters after his third straight day of questioning by Senate investigators. Then, he denied that he was "denying anything."

"I'm not saying anything," said the mystery man with White House contacts. "I'm referring you to Government records."

"You mean the customs records," he was asked.

"Yes," answered Maragon.

Less Joyful After Quiz

The dapper 56-year-old former perfume company agent seemed without his usual smiling assurance as he left a two-hour session with the staff of the Senate investigating subcommittee.

Reporters immediately began questioning about a story in Saturday's New York Herald Tribune that in 1946 he had tried to bring in perfume oils worth $8000 disguised as a gift of champagne for Mrs. Truman, wife of the President.

A committee spokesman said they were looking into the report as a result of material given them by the newspaper.

Before yesterday's session, Maragon had told reporters he would tell them about his questioning by the investigators. The group is looking into the activities of Washington "five per centers." The latter are persons who help businessmen get Government orders for a fee of five per cent. There's nothing illegal in the practice.

Name in Hunt Diary

Maragon's name, according to a committee member, appeared in the diary of James V. Hunt, former Army colonel and WAA official. Newspaper charges of his activities touched off the investigation. Columnist Drew Pearson declared recently that Maragon was "not only a five per center but also a 50 per center."

"There's nothing new," said the latter after yesterday's session with the probers. "It's like the same old girl with a new dress."

Then the Malta-born Maragon led reporters on a tour of the Senate Office Building. He shrugged off most of their questions as he rode up and down elevators and through the corridors of the sprawling building. Then he stopped to talk to the press for about 20 minutes in the broiling heat on the sidewalk outside.

The newsmen asked him about

2% Sales Tax Starts Monday Along With Other New Levies

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

The District's new 2 per cent sales tax, accompanied by new taxes on autos and cigarettes and boosts in liquor taxes, goes into effect at 12:01 a.m. Monday.

The first to feel it will be customers enjoying expensive midnight snacks at all night lunchrooms. Meals selling for more than $1.26 will be subject to the 2 per cent retail sales tax. Exemptions include food items and medicines.

The sales tax is 2 cents on each $1 with sales below 14 cents not taxed. The cigarette tax will be a penny per pack and the auto excise tax will be 2 per cent levied on the retail selling price. The increased gallonage tax will add a nickel to a fifth and boosted liquor license fees may add a little more. Cigarettes and autos are exempt from sales tax, but liquor is subject to it.

On Monday, the city's estimated 20,000 retailers will begin collecting the tax on all sales except those on the exempt list or made

British Vessel Braves Shells, Flees Yangtze

Warship Trapped By Reds in April Escapes Unscathed

London, July 30 (AP).—The British sloop Amethyst escaped today down the Yangtze River under the fire of Chinese Communist shore batteries and rejoined the fleet without suffering damage or casualties, the Admiralty proudly announced tonight.

A signal received from the Amethyst said: "Rejoined the fleet. No damage or casualties. God save the King."

The Amethyst has been at anchor in the Yangtze River since last April 20, when she was shelled by Communist shore batteries and ran aground on Rose Island, 60 miles downstream from Nanking.

The Amethyst was one of four British warships fired on in the Yangtze last April. The gunfire killed 44 British sailors in all.

The Admiralty announcement on the escape said the Amethyst managed to slip around an obstacle at Kiangyin and continued downstream. Kiangyin is about 55 miles from Nanking, on the way to the East China Sea.

The Admiralty said it was advised by the commander in chief of the Far East Naval Forces that when the Amethyst slipped her moorings in her escape attempt she immediately came under fire of shore guns.

She was again fired on by Kiangyin forts.

The British had been negotiating with the Chinese Communists for release of the Amethyst The negotiations bogged down about June 1.

Odds on Battle Drop as Race Enters Stretch

Edwards Seen as Key In Possible Two-Way Contest With Miller

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., July 30. — All four candidates for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination warmed up their last-round punches today, each confident of victory in Tuesday's primary.

Richmond bookmakers were offering even money that State Senator John S. Battle of Charlottesville will be nominated. Takers, however, were scarce.

Local bettors would quote no odds on the other candidates—Francis Pickens Miller of Albemarle, widely held to be neck and neck with Battle; Horace H. Edwards, former mayor of Richmond, and Remmie L. Arnold, Petersburg pen manufacturer.

Several weeks ago Battle was favored against the field by 6-to-5 odds when wagering was mentioned.

But the free-flowing conversation in this market place of political opinion of late has centered largely on Edwards, with political observers conceding about one tenth of the total vote to Arnold.

Edwards, who resigned the chairmanship of the State Democratic Central Committee in a rift with the "Byrd organization," is acknowledged as the key to the out-

Kefauver Hits 4 Objections To Rule Bill

Calls Some of D. C. Commissioners' Ideas Worthy of Adoption

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) yesterday took issue with the District Commissioners on four major provisions in his Senate-approved home rule bill.

He said he welcomed the Commissioners' indorsement last month of the principle of home rule. He agreed that some of the 21 questions raised by the city fathers "might well be adopted." But he said he "would object to changing" these provisions:

Qualification for membership on the proposed District Council, the legislative veto of council action, the method of adopting bond issues and dual voting privileges for Washington residents.

Kefauver's reply to the Commissioners came in the form of a letter to Representatives Oren Harris (D., Ark.), chairman of the House District Subcommittee which last week finished home rule hearings. The letter was for entry in the hearing record, which is being kept open until Tuesday.

Harris said yesterday he will call his subcommittee together "very likely this week," probably on Wednesday. He said he did not know how many executive sessions will be necessary before a vote is taken.

Kefauver declared in his letter the Commissioners' indorsement of the home rule principle "is a great gain for the cause of democracy in the Nation's Capital city." Many of the technical changes they suggested, he said, "are deserving

New Contract Ends Strike of Truck Drivers

Plasterer Tenders' Walkout Is Averted By 10-Cent Increase

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Settlement of a strike and a threatened walkout yesterday brought peace—temporarily at least—to the Washington area's 100-million-dollar commercial construction industry.

Drivers of ready-mix concrete trucks agreed to end their strike, begun Thursday morning, for a new work contract giving them an immediate increase of 10 cents an hour, retroactive to July 11, and 5 cents additional an hour beginning next May 15. The agreement will run for two years.

Plasterer tenders, who had announced their intention to strike Monday morning for an increase of 12½ cents an hour, settled yesterday for 10 cents. The contract will run two years.

The concrete truck drivers, affiliated with Local 639, AFL Teamsters, struck Thursday after rejecting an offer of 10 cents retroactive to July 15, demanding, instead, 15 cents, retroactive to May 15. Their pay rate has been $1.25 an hour.

Yesterday, Charles Bell, president of Local 639, informed Francis Kelly, attorney for the three struck ready-mix firms—Howat, Maloney and Super Concrete—that settlement could be achieved for 10 cents now with 5 cents additional next May.

In accepting the new terms, Kelly issued the following statement:

"The proposal offered by management on Wednesday, but rejected by the drivers, included not only the offer of 10 cents an hour, but also definite consideration of an additional 5 cents on May 15, 1950. The employers feel that the strike was both unnecessary and regrettable, believing what has been agreed upon today would have been agreed upon without a strike.

"The employers feel that the increase of 5 cents per hour next May is not too high a price to pay for industrial peace for a two-year period."

The 170 drivers will return to their jobs Monday morning, according to Local 639.

The plasterer tenders, who belong to Local 571, AFL Laborers, settled their threat to strike Monday for 10 cents, or the same amount for which laborers of Local 74 recently settled their 6½-week strike against the Master Builders Association. The tenders' new rate will be $1.85 an hour.

Vinson, 3 Others Don Parachutes In Fire Scare

By The Associated Press

Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson, Army Secretary Gordon Gray, Senator Frank P. Graham (D., N. C.) and Representative Harold D. Cooley (D., N. C.) climbed hastily into parachutes last Saturday when their Air Force C-47 plane was believed to be afire, it was learned yesterday.

The plane, bound for Washington from Hickory, N. C., made a one-engine landing at Winston-Salem. A broken de-icing rubber, blowing in the slipstream, had been mistaken for a fire.

Gray said yesterday the Chief Justice was "the calmest man aboard."

Cleveland Man Burns to Death Hunting Lettuce

Cleveland, July 30 (AP).—Peter Fasciano, 63, burned to death today in the garbage incinerator of suburban Cleveland Heights.

Fasciano was hunting lettuce for his rabbits when city workers, unaware he was nearby, dumped a load of garbage from a truck. Some of the refuse struck Fasciano, throwing him into the 1600-degree heat, police reported.

The workmen quickly pushed a broom to Fasciano, but the handle fell off as he grabbed it. Then he lost consciousness. Rescuers recovered the body two hours later.

Expose of How the 'Numbers' Were Rigged in New York Shows the 'Swindled' Are the Victims of a Double Steal

By Benjamin C. Bradlee
Post Reporter

New York, July 30.—This city's big and little number-betting suckers took a double clipping from the big-time operators of a 50-million-dollar-racket here. But they are just learning today how badly they really were gypped.

Frank Hogan, crusading district attorney who exposed the swindle with a roundup of seven men from New York to Cincinnati, today asserted emphatically that the same double gyp can be worked in Washington or any other city where the numbers racket flourishes.

It takes money and the cooperation, knowing or otherwise, of a big newspaper. But Hogan said "all numbers lotteries will be crooked if they can be made crooked and if the crooks who run them can make a dollar out of it."

The way New York and New Jersey operators rigged the winning number each day so it would pay the least possible amount to bettors, Hogan said, is a perfect case in point.

Even with an "honest" payoff, the odds against each player are 1000 to 1. Should he win, he is paid only $600 to $1. That's the first clip. But in the setup Hogan uncovered, the sucker didn't even have that chance. The "rigging" of the number was the second gyp.

Hogan made his revelations as Dennison Duble, 59-year-old former secretary of the Cincinnati Clearing House Association, was released in "protective custody" of Hogan's detectives.

He is charged with conspiracy—conspiracy to contrive a lottery, maintaining a place for gambling and cheating at gambling. He waived examination in Felony Court and his attorney, Robert Reckman of Cincinnati, said Duble feels he has "been duped by certain people."

Presumably he will turn State's evidence. He is scheduled to appear before a grand jury investigating the case Monday or Tuesday.

Edward Kane, New York poolroom operator, another of those charged in the case, has made $50,000 bond to get his freedom, and Abe Goldberg, one of two employes of the New York Journal-American accused in the case, was released on $40,000 bond. Irving Bitz, another Journal-American employe, and three others are held in Tombs prison.

Despite its multimillion-dollar handle, this numbers ring is but one of a score operating in the New York area, Hogan said, and but one of hundreds operating openly in cities like Washington, Chicago, Los Angeles, wherever a man can be separated from his money.

Hogan, who holds the position from which Thomas E. Dewey rocketed to national prominence, told The Washington Post that without exception all numbers rackets or "banks" as he calls them, can be rigged, and most of them are.

"In my experience all lotteries can be made crooked," he added. "This one here was the most efficiently crooked one I have ever heard about, but other numbers lotteries which pay off on mutuel handles can also be fixed and have been fixed." Washington's giant numbers industry pays off on mutuel totals at Illinois race tracks in summer and Florida tracks in winter.

This is how the numbers bettor was rooked in New York, according to Hogan's chief assistant, Alfred Scotti. It may or may not be how numbers bettors get rooked in Washington.

In all cities, the winning number has three digits, any combination from 000 to 999, although in different cities the number is determined in different ways.

In New York, the winning number of the ring Hogan believes he has smashed, was determined in this manner. The first two digits of the winning number were the second and third digits of the noon report on bond sales of the New York Stock Exchange.

The third digit in the winning number was the second digit from the Cincinnati Clearing House report, the total dollar value of checks processed through the clearing house during a day.

This is how the ring rigged the winning number each day, according to Hogan, so that each day they had to pay less on the particular winning number than on any other number:

No numbers bets were accepted after 11:30 each morning. At noon, one of the accused would pick up the noon bond-sales figure from a

Attlee Gives Warning Britain Cannot Stand Costly Strikes

London, July 30 (U.P.).—Prime Minister Clement Attlee, head of Britain's Labor government, warned British workers today that the country cannot stand costly strikes and inflationary wage increases.

Attlee, opening Labor's 1950 election campaign, predicted victory for his party, but warned his followers that "we shall need self-control . . . (and) continued effort to win through."

"We cannot afford to have strikes which will lose this country great sums of money," the Prime Minister declared sharply. "We must all take to heart the truth that general increases in wages without increases of production will merely lead to inflation and will not help the workers."

Attlee, speaking at Walthamstow, devoted much of his time to a point-by-point rejection of Conservative Leader Winston Churchill's campaign attack last week on the Labor government.

He accused Churchill of "abuse and misrepresentation," and charged he was often irresponsible and ignorant in his onslaughts on the government.

Denying Churchill's charge that the government is "squandering" money, the Labor Party chief said

Fellow Worker Arrested

UMW Employe Shot in Neck As Aftermath of Staff Picnic

A picnic of the headquarters office staff of the United Mine Workers ended yesterday with one employe shot in the neck and in critical condition and another arrested on a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon.

The victim was identified as Peter Brampton, 22, of 1830 Connecticut ave., who, associates said, was acting as a "good Samaritan" for the man who is charged with shooting him.

That man, police said, is Harold LaMar Hatter, 26, of 2634 Tunlaw rd. nw. The shooting took place in Hatter's apartment. Three other persons from the picnic were waiting outside for Brampton at the time.

The three were Mr. and Mrs. John C. Stockley, 2413 Perry st. ne., and James Barry, 412 10th st. ne.

Mrs. Stockley and Barry also work at the UMW headquarters Stockley is employed in a department store.

The three told police that Hatter had gone to the picnic at Rollingwood Park early yesterday and had been drinking heavily. About 3 p.m., they decided to take him home, and did so, with Brampton. The four escorted Hatter into his apartment, the three told police, and left Brampton there to get Hatter into bed while they remained in a car outside.

After 10 to 15 minutes, they said.

Tax Deadline Is Midnight

Midnight tonight is the deadline for filing District personal property tax returns, District officials warned yesterday. Forms must be in the mail and postmarked not later than 12 p. m. to beat the 20 per cent penalty.

Forms may be obtained today at the guard desk in the District Building. The door on the 14th st. side of the building will be open.

Man Shooting Niagara Rapids In Tube Injured

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 30 (AP). Major Hill, battered and covered with blood, was pulled from a steel cylinder about 6 p. m. (EST) tonight after an unsuccessful attempt to run the roaring lower rapids of the Niagara River.

The 30-year-old Niagara Falls (Ont.) riverman was in the river just over five hours. The last hour and a half was spent in a whirling eddy, where his 10-foot 6-inch tube was tumbled madly, end over end.

Rescuers said Hill apparently suffered internal injuries and possibly a fractured leg.

Hill was attempting to duplicate the feat performed last summer by his brother, William (Red) Hill, jr., and years ago by his father.

Before the tube was sealed, he told a reporter he just wanted "to satisfy my own curiosity that the trip can be made in a fragile barrel."

German Politicians Attack Allied Rule

By Brack Curry

Frankfurt, Germany, July 30 (AP). West German political leaders are abusing the Western Allies, and almost ignoring the Communists, in their drive for votes in the August 14 elections.

Charges of deceit and arrogance, of greed and repression, are hurled at the United States, France and Britain.

Candidates center their fire on the Allies' security program, intended to prevent future German aggression. Singled out for attack are the dismantling of German factories which produced war materials, the International Ruhr authority, and the Military Security Board. The issues of Germany's territorial losses in the east and west also are raised.

In effect the Germans are serving notice that the anti-Communist parties will present a solid front against many of the Allies' basic policies when the German federal republic is formed.

This republic will be made up of the 11 states in the United States, British and French zones. A parliament of 400 members will be chosen in the voting August 14. The parliament, in turn, will name the president and the prime minister (chancellor), who will organize the government.

Dr. Kurt Schumacher, fiery leader of the left-wing Social Democrats, has raked Allied policies in probably the bitterest language used by any non-Communist German leader since the Nazi regime.

Speaking in Mainz, he declared the "arrogant guardianship" of Germany by the Allies should end. Recalling Nazi brutalities, he said "the wrongs of yesterday are offset by the wrongs of the victors of today."

Schumacher devotes a major part of each speech to acid comments on the dismantling of German factories. He declares dismantling is designed to destroy German competition for world markets.

Minister-President (Governor) Karl Arnold, of the British zone state of North Rhine-Westphalia accused the Allies of convicting of war crimes some Germans who tried to prevent the war and overthrow Hitler.

Speaking of territorial losses, Arnold told a cheering audience of 10,000 in Cologne that "the German people cannot give up the area east of the Odor and Neisse Rivers." German territory east of those rivers was taken over by Poland and Soviet Russia after the war. Arnold suggested Germans and Poles should control it jointly.

Shanghai Pay Row

Consulate Blockade Continues

Shanghai, July 30 (AP).—A lock-in of three United States consular officials by about 150 former employes of the United States Navy continued into its second night tonight with no immediate change in the situation in sight.

The former employes, mostly Chinese but including a sprinkling of Indians and White Russians, are demanding additional pay and severance allowances equal to six and one-half months' pay.

Those blockaded in the consulate are Walter McConaughty, acting consul-general; Cmdr. Morgan Slayton, naval attache; and Reuben Thomas, administrative attache.

Ten other Americans attached to the Consulate, plus a number of Chinese, had to stay in the building Friday night. They were permitted to come and go today, but only essential personnel reported for work lest another general lock-in develop.

The dispute goes back to the swift withdrawal of United States naval units at the end of April, a month before the Communists took over.

The former Navy employes contend they were not properly discharged and received no notice. They besieged the Consulate July 6 but desisted when Thomas opened negotiations with them and with the Communist Foreign Affairs Bureau.

Thomas ultimately offered a settlement averaging three months' pay, which was approved by the United States State and Navy Departments. He said more than half the claimants were willing to accept, but the Foreign Affairs Bureau ordered a settlement deferred pending further study.

Communist Threat To Hengyang Lifted

Canton, July 30 (AP).—The Chinese Nationalists reported today successful counterattacks had removed the Red threat to Hengyang, important government bastion 265 miles north of Canton.

A private telephone call from Hengyang lent color to the Nationalist contention. This call said the Communists had withdrawn from Chuchow, on the railway 70 miles north of Hengyang.

There was no explanation for the the withdrawal, but it appears to be because the Nationalists were threatening Red supply lines to the east. Fierce fighting was reported northeast of Chuchow, but there were no details.

Official Nationalist dispatches said counterattacking government troops had recaptured Lienhwa, 90 miles east of Hengyang.

The Nationalists also said they had halted a Red drive 150 miles east of the railway that leads to Canton.

Fosdick, Case Named For China Aid Study

By The Associated Press

Secretary of State Acheson said yesterday that Raymond Bland Fosdick and Dr. Everett Case have been named State Department consultants to help in development of a new United States policy toward China.

Fosdick, 66, a former president of the Rockefeller Foundation, is now on his way back from Europe and will come to Washington immediately after his arrival.

The department said Dr. Case, president of Colgate University, also will return from Europe soon and assume his duties as consultant about August 20.

Mayor of Berlin Says Finance Crisis Looms

Berlin, July 30 (NYHT).—West Berlin has come out of the blockade "war of nerves" only to be threatened with a financial crisis, Mayor Ernest Reuter warned today.

The deflationary crisis has caused unemployment to jump to an all-time peak of almost 215,000 persons—nearly double the 110,000 idle at the peak of the blockade.

Reuter was critical of Western Allied financial policies, particularly recent orders to shut down public works programs for economy.

The only solution, Reuter said, is help under the Marshall Plan, granting of large-scale subsidies to Berlin industries and an effort on the part of the west German government to persuade manufacturers to place orders with west Berlin firms.

He said John J. McCloy, American Military Governor, had promised to lend his support for Marshall Plan money, but there would be a five-month lapse before the money could arrive, if the grant were approved.

West Berlin would need about 60 million dollars in Marshall Plan aid in addition to subsidies forthcoming from western Germany, Reuter said.

West Berlin's plight, Reuter pointed out, stems in large part from political reasons. The city, by Soviet policy, is cut off from its normal markets and sources of raw material in the Soviet zone, in which it is an island.

The zone in peacetime bought 50 per cent of Berlin's wares. There is no possibility this municipal outpost behind the Iron Curtain can balance its budget.

American Staff Chiefs in Germany

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

CONFER IN FRANKFURT—The United States Joint Chiefs of Staff landed in Frankfurt, Germany, aboard President Truman's personal plane, and this photograph was taken at the airport there. They are Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg, Air Force commander; Admiral Louis Denfeld, Chief of Naval Operations, and Gen. Omar Bradley, Army Chief of Staff by this opposition, the program's sponsors privately admit they regard all this as an encouraging sign for passage of some form of arms aid.

Cut Sought in Arms Aid Plan

For them, any indication of compromise would mean settling for less than they regard as necessary. The time to consider "cuts," they say, is after the testimony and supporting evidence is submitted.

Among the "alternatives" to the proposed arms bill being discussed on Capitol Hill yesterday was one to:

Cut the cash outlay to 700 million dollars; eliminate the bill's 45-million-dollar "emergency fund" to be used at the discretion of the President; completely limit the bill to one year instead of permitting deliveries to continue into 1951, and tie the bill directly to a defense plan that could be absorbed into the North Atlantic Treaty organization.

Other to Be Aided

In addition to sending arms and technical aid to Western Europe, the pending bill would authorize $300,580,000 for similar purposes to Greece, Turkey, Korea, Iran and the Philippines.

The National Military Establishment would provide the program with "excess" equipment originally costing 450 million dollars, which would be charged to the program for only 75 million dollars, the "rehabilitation" cost.

On Friday, before the U. S. Joint Chiefs of Staff left for a 10-day trip to discuss with European military leaders there the defense council to be established under the 12-nation Atlantic Treaty, Army Chief of Staff Omar N. Badley outlined this Nation's proposals for defending the Atlatic area.

Under this plan, the United States would have responsibility to "deliver the atomic bomb" and lend its naval power to the common defense, while the bulk of ground forces would be supplied by Western Europe.

Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson estimated that United States help for rearming Western Europe would be required over a four- or five-year period.

In an address yesterday before the Virginia Bar Association at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Ambassador-at-Large Philip C. Jessup, who participated in the recent Big Four meeting in Paris, said in reply to those who wish to postpone arms aid:

". . . Full-fledged development of an integrated defense under the (North Atlantic) treaty will require five or six years."

"Defense in Being"

The military assistance program, he said, would provide an early foundation for this defense and would not conflict with it, providing a "defense in being in Western Europe . . ."

This, he said, "is designed to meet sudden, surprise or concentrated pressure against one small country—in other words, to thwart the technique of conquest on the installment plan, which aggressors have employed successfully in the past."

Hearings on the arms program resume Monday before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, with Gen. George C. Marshall scheduled to testify.

On Tuesday, the committee will hear Ambassador to Greece Henry F. Grady and Ambassador Averell W. Harriman, Economic Cooperation Administration representative in Europe.

Several committee members have announced they will closely question Harriman on the subject of recovery cooperation.

These members declare that European aid recipients have failed to carry out promises to lower trade barriers and stabilize currencies, and therefore any arms aid to them should have tight "strings" on it.

U. S. Strategists to See Air Bases in England

By The Associated Press

The three top American military strategists will make a first-hand check this week on United States bomber forces based in England.

The inspection of B-29 bases by the Joint Chiefs of Staff is given increasing significance in light of their emphasis on U. S. strategic bombing and use of the atom bomb in event of war.

Their conception of defense strategy if Western Europe is assaulted was given to Congress just before they left for meetings with military chiefs of the member nations and visits to U. S. installations in Europe.

In that outline, Army Gen. Omar Bradley said the recommendations of the three—Air Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Admiral Louis Denfeld and himself—assumed that priority centered about our ability to deliver the atom bomb.

Meanwhile, evidence grew that a substantial amount of the defensive planning will be directed at stopping Russia's mighty tank forces should she launch upon a push toward the West.

The Joint Chiefs plan to be in England on Wednesday and Thursday. They will confer with the British chiefs of staff and representatives of other pact nations who are there and, at the same time, make inspections of United States air installations on the island.

The three British bases used by the USAF compose the largest overseas concentration of strategic bombing power. It is from those bases that the initial retaliatory air strikes presumably would be launched in event of attack.

Chiefs of Staff In Frankfurt To Open Talks

Frankfurt, Germany, July 30 (AP). The United States military Chiefs of Staff flew in from Washington today for a get-acquainted survey of Western Europe's defenses.

Top-secret conferences with officers of Italy and Luxembourg and with American military leaders in Germany are docketed Monday. The party—including Army Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Air Force Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg and Admiral Louis E. Denfeld of the Navy—has a dual mission on its 10-day tour:

1. To discuss the proposed military organization provided by the 12-nation North Atlantic Treaty.

2. To make a first-hand study of American troops in Europe, the bulk of whom are concentrated in western Germany.

The chiefs arrived this afternoon in President Truman's plane, the Independence. They will move on next week to London, Paris and Vienna for conferences with military leaders of the pact nations.

They will confer here with John J. McCloy, the American Military Governor, with Army Navy and Air Force commanders in Germany and with the Luxembourg and Italian military representatives.

East Europe Faces Crisis, Report Says

London, July 30 (U.P.).—The Royal Institute of International Affairs, turning the tables on Communist propagandists, reported today that eastern Europe is facing an economic crisis which may force 10 million unemployed and unwanted peasants into slave labor camps.

An institute survey warned that national economies behind the Iron Curtain have been disrupted by over-hasty land reforms and Communist attempts to industrialize Russia's agricultural satellite nations, and said "Labor camps will become an increasing probability."

The report said east European leaders, trying to speed industrial development at all costs, had forgotten the needs of agriculture at a time when farm markets are better than industrial markets. At the same time indiscriminate land reforms have caused a decrease in agriculture production in the Communist countries.

Three reasons were offered for the probable failure of collective farming in the satellite countries:

1. The peasant class in the nations sovietized since the war is different from the Russian farm population because of its national unity and interregional communications.

2. For the past 20 years, east European peasants have owned their own land, followed their own social doctrine, and operated their own political parties.

3. The difference is caused by the density of agricultural population between sprawling Russia and the fairly tightly-populated satellite nations.

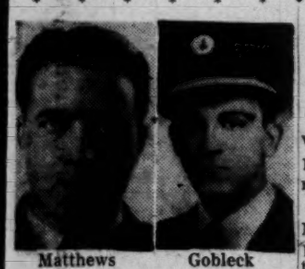
Eyewitness Tells Of Being 'Buzzed'



Matthews Gobleck

(George Humphrey, of Fairhaven, N. J., saw the crash of an Eastern Air Lines DC-3 and a Navy fighter plane. He is manager of the Morrisville, Pa., airport.—Editor's Note.)

By George Humphrey
As Told to the United Press

Fairhaven, N. J., July 30.—I was flying this morning in my Piper Cub from Morrisville to Monmouth, N. J., to buy some parts.

I was at about 1000 feet when a Navy Hellcat pilot began making passes at my ship. He buzzed me twice.

The second time he cut right in front of my nose. Then he pulled up in a tight chandelle and smacked into the transport, just aft of the wing. I was about 500 feet below them.

He just about cut that big transport in half.

A chandelle is a kind of climbing bank, the fastest way to gain altitude.

I got out of there as fast as I could after it hit. The air was full of flying airplane parts. I saw the wreckage hit the ground. A huge cloud of dust covered the wreck at once.

I'd say that pilot had good technique. He looked like a very experienced pilot. But I guess he couldn't have been very old. You don't find old-timers pulling stunts like that.

He came within 100 or 200 feet of my plane. The regulations prohibit approaching closer than 500 feet.

He just never saw that airliner.

H. S. LeRoy, D. C. Lawyer, Is a Victim

Elizabeth, was in Corpus Christi, Tex., attending the funeral of her father when the crash occurred. A three-year-old son also survives.

Leroy had been in New York consulting with a client and had been staying at the Harvard Club. He had finished his work and was on the way home when the crash occurred.

Mr. Leroy was considered an authority on international law and served on many missions and conferences on international affairs.

His wife, the former Emily Schoenemann Redding, whom he married February 29, 1920, was prostrated and under physicians' care at her home.

Active in Rotary

Mr. LeRoy was active in Rotary International and District Rotary matters, being elected governor of the 180th Rotary district of Rotary International in May, 1947, and president of the Washington Rotary Club in April, 1944.

He was born in Olean, N. Y., July 18, 1891, the son of Charles Hayden and Ida (Sanderson) LeRoy. He was graduated A.B. from the University of Rochester, N. Y., in 1914, and as LL.B. from Harvard in 1918, and admitted to the New York bar in 1920. He practiced in New York in 1920-21 and was admitted to the District Bar in 1922. Since that year he has practiced in Washington, also being admitted in 1942 to the Maryland Bar.

Shortly after his graduation from Harvard he was associated with the late Robert Lansing, one-time Secretary of State, in handling Chinese interests at the Disarmament Conference. In that period he also organized the Millspaugh Financial Mission to Persia.

At the time of his death he was engaged in teaching aviation law at National University. In 1946 he was granted university leave to serve two years as a member of the Internatonal Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts.

On Arbitration Tribunal

Among missions he had been on were the American-British Arbitration Tribunal, 1925; legal advisor and member of the general secretariat of International Radio-Telegraph Conference, Washington, 1927; delegate to the second International Conference on Comparative Law, the Hague, 1937; representative of the American Bar Association on the Advisory Commission to the American Section of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts; Spanish Government Counsel, 1939-45; counsel to the Finnish government since 1942, and member of the American Arbitration Association committee for implementation of arbitrary standards approved by the seventh International Conference of American States, 1943.

Also active in peace efforts, he was a member of the national advisory council, American Peace Society and a delegate to the first conference of the Inter-American Bar Association in Havana, 1941.

Mr. LeRoy was secretary-general of the United Nations League of Lawyers; a member of the American Bar Association of which he was chairman of the committee on teaching of international and comparative law, 1936-37; and chairman of the association's committee on the international aspects of aeronautics and telecommunication.

He was also a member of the American Law Institute, Bar Association of the District of Columbia, Federal Communications Bar Association, American Society of International Law of which he was treasurer, Friends of the Law Library of Congress, and Past War Commission of Rotary International, 1945-46.

In addition, he was a member of the following scholastic societies: Alpha Delta Phi, Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Delta Kappa.

Active in Local Clubs

Among his club and civic activities were memberships in National Intercollegiate Flying Club, chairman and vice president of national Presbyterian board of trustees, Rotary, Chevy Chase, Cosmos, Torch and Harvard of Washington.

Among his authored works were "Air Law, 1935," and "Aeronautical and Radio Law, 1939."

Besides Mrs. LeRoy he is survived by a brother, Hayden LeRoy, jr., of Lambertville, N. J. No funeral arrangements have yet been made.

Mr. LeRoy also maintained a country home near Cookesville, Md.

Mrs. Harry R. Smith

Mrs. Smith, employed as a training officer in the United States Employment Office, 17th and H sts. nw., was a leader in Silver Spring civic and political affairs. She was returning to Washington from Hartford, Conn., after a week's vacation with friends there.

A native of Montgomery County, she had worked for the employment service in Washington and Silver Spring for the past 15 years. In 1947-48, she was president of the International Association of USES employes.

Her husband, Harry R. Smith, is the owner of the Meadowbrok Service Station at Meadowwood, Md.

An active member of the Silver Spring Democratic Women's Club, Mrs. Smith was also prominent in the Silver Spring Parent-Teacher Association. She organized the Montgomery-Blair High School Band last year and is a former president of the Boosters Club of the schools.

She leaves two children by a former marriage, Gerald Lee Howard, 15, a student at Leonard Hall Naval School, Leonardtown, Md., and Betty Howard, 17, a senior at Montgomery-Blair High School.

Mrs. Anne F. Curry

Mrs. Curry, 78, for the past 30 years has been active in affairs of the Daughters of the American Revolution, of which she was a member. She had recently been engaged in library research work at national headquarters of the organization here. She was returning from a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Eleanor Steubner of West Hartford, Conn., when she died.

Mrs. Curry, born in Anoka, Minn., lived alone at 625 A st. ne. She is survived by her daughter, and a sister, Mrs. Craig E. Bradbury, of 628 Ray dr., Silver Spring, Md.

Her husband, Elmer E. Curry, died some years ago.

which kept them at a distance for almost half an hour.

Firemen from Fort Dix and nearby communities said there wasn't a sound from the burning plane when rescuers reached it.

Eastern Airlines, Army, Navy and Civil Aeronautics Board officials sped to the crash area to investigate the accident.

[It was the first crash of a scheduled airliner in the United States in 11 months and the first for an Eastern Airlines plane in a year and a half.]

The 12 passengers, as identified by the airline, were:

Miss Alice Sutherland, New York City.

Mrs. Mae H. Smith, Hollywood, Md.

Miss Gesina Deholl, Birmingham, Ala.

Richard P. Katzin, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Mrs. Phillip A. Katzin and her 5-months-old daughter, Susan, of Winston-Salem, N. C. Mrs. Katzin was described as a sister-in-law of Richard Katzin.

Two Killed, Two Hurt Badly As Plane Crashes Into River

Chicopee, Mass., July 30 (U.P.).—Two men were killed and two injured seriously tonight when their amphibian Army surplus plane crashed while attempting a takeoff from the Connecticut River.

The dead were identified as Louis de Parma of Agawam and Thomas Cordett, West Springfield. Their bodies still were not recovered as police, volunteers and a wrecking from nearby Westover Air Force Base worked to bring the craft to the surface.

Hospitalized at Springfield were Vito Carlo and Leo Capuano, both of Springfield, who were thrown clear of the canopy-top plane when it stalled on a third takeoff attempt from its mooring on the Chicopee side of the river. It barely missed high-tension wires.

Police said the injured men struggled to shore.

The bodies of the victims could be seen in the cockpit from the surface as high-powered lights lit up the accident scene.

One witness, a small boy, said the plane twice tried to take off from the smooth water, but could not gain altitude. On the third try, he said, it rose about 80 feet before it stalled and crashed.

Senators Try to Clip Unit's Funds Power

By The Associated Press

A determined effort to clip some of the vast powers wielded by the 21-member Senate Appropriations Committee appeared under way yesterday.

Some Senators said privately that is the real cause of perhaps the worst snarl in regular money bills in 25 years or longer.

Although the new fiscal year is a month old, nearly 30 billion dollars worth of appropriations now are piled up awaiting Senate action.

Majority Leader Lucas (D., Ill.) and other Democratic congressional leaders hope to break this legislative log-jam this week. But no one now is certain when the disputes will end and Congress can plan to adjourn.

Funds in Stop-Gap Bills

Normally most appropriations are cleared by Congress before July 1, when Government agencies need the funds to operate. Two stop-gap measures are providing funds until August 15.

Usually decisions of the Appropriations Committee on bills carrying operating funds for all Government agencies slide through the Senate without serious challenge.

But Senators who object to provisions they regard as new legislation, or changes in previous legislation, are attacking them on the Senate floor with increasing success.

Both Democrats and Republicans are following this course, including some Appropriations Committeemen who differ with the group's majority.

Core of the dispute is disagreement between the powerful Appropriations group—which has a tight hold on the Treasury purse strings—and the rest of the Senate about what constitutes legislation in an appropriation bill.

Senate and House rules require that Congress first must determine by law the Nation's over-all policies and then make specific authorization of funds to carry them out. Later definite appropriations come along to provide the money. There is a fixed rule that these must not contain legislation.

Actually both the House and Senate include legislative provisions or riders in nearly every appropriation bill. Normally, few lawmakers question them. If they do, a majority vote in the House or approval by a two-thirds vote in the Senate is required to settle the issue.

It was the legislative question that sent the $5,647,724,000 foreign aid bill back to the Senate Appropriations Committee last week.

The committee had earmarked more than two billion dollars of the funds for buying of surplus United States farm products and another 50 million for use as a loan to Spain.

After hours of bitter debate and wrangling over its own rules, the Senate finally decided these and three other Appropriations Committee provisions were legislation.

But the committee, upon reconsidering, clung to its original intent on most of them. Instead of stating positively how the disputed funds were to be spent, it now has rewritten them in a negative manner, saying they now are limitations upon spending, to get around the ban on legislation.

Other disputed provisions, including a large number in the bill that went through the House unquestioned, were stricken out, but will be offered separately in the Senate by the committee as amendments.

Chairman McKellar (D., Tenn.) of the Appropriations group said parliamentarians inform him the revised bill now conforms with Senate rules.

And Senator McClellan (D., Ark.), author of the disputed farm surplus amendments, said he is "satisfied," although he cut the total from about $2,000,000,000 down to $1,800,000,000. This was in line with a general cut made in the foreign aid funds total.

Majority Leader Lucas said he still will battle to knock out the restrictive provisions.

When the Senate recessed for the weekend, it was battling over an appropriation containing more than eight billion dollars in cash and contract authority for some 33 independent agencies, bureaus and commissions.

Lucas plans to put this aside early in the week to get back to the foreign aid measure.

Gen. Devers Will Retire In September

Fort Monroe, Va., July 30 (AP).—Gen. Jacob L. Devers, chief of the Army Field Forces, will retire September 30, the public information office at Fort Monroe, site of AFF headquarters, announced today.

The famed general will be 62 years old in September and an elaborate ceremony is expected for the formal retirement ceremony at the fort. In addition to AFF participation, ranking officers from the Fifth Naval District headquarters at Norfolk, the Transportation Corps center at Fort Eustis, Langley Air Force Base and Ninth Air Force headquarters are expected with Federal Government, State and Army dignitaries.

There was no indication today who might succeed the general in directing activities of the AFF.

He assumed command of the Army Ground Forces headquarters at Fort Monroe October 1, 1946, and on March 15, 1948, the Army Department abolished the AGF and created the office of the Chief of the Army Field Forces.

2 Killed as French, Argentine Ships Crash

St. Nazaire, France, July 30 (AP).—The 800-ton French vessel Listrac sank today after colliding with the the 10,000-ton Argentine ship Naviero. The captain and third mechanic of the Listrac were killed.

The collision occurred in the English Channel west of Cherbourg.

B-36 Procurement Hearings to Open Aug. 9

House investigators are about ready to open their long-scheduled probe of the Air Force's B-36 bomber procurement program, it was disclosed last night.

Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee announced that public hearings will begin Tuesday, August 9. He added that Robert A. Lovett and Floyd Odlum will be "among the first witnesses" heard.

Lovett was Assistant Secretary of War for Air during the war and later served as Undersecretary of State. He is now a railroad executive. Odlum controls Consolidated-Vultee, makers of th egiant six-engined B-36.

The investigation was ordered by the House June 8, after Representative James E. Van Zandt (R., Pa.) told his colleagues he had heard "ugly rumors" concerning B-36 procurement.

He said the reports concerned Secretary of the Air Force W. Stuart Symington and Defense Secretary Louis Johnson, who prior to his appointment was a director of Consolidated-Vultee.

Van Zandt said there are "well-founded" reports that the Air Force was cutting back its order of B-36s until about the time Johnson and Odium began raising funds for President Truman's 1948 campaign. Since then the Air Force has poured additional hundreds of millions into new contracts for the bomber.

Symington and Johnson have denied Van Zandt's charges and "insinuations" and welcomed the probe. The former Air Force generals have high praise of the bomber and are putting great emphasis on it in current USAF plans. Friends of the officials contend that Navy opposition to Air Force strategic bombing policies and rival aircraft builders are behind the charges.

The investigation of the USAF procurement program has been broadened into a general review of the Nation's aerial war policies, covering such points as whether there is undue emphasis on long-range bombing at the expense of tactical air and other services.

Investigators headed by Joseph B. Keenan, chief prosecutor of the Japanese war criminals, have been digging into the evidence for the past three weeks. Vinson was asked about Lovett's call as a witness, inasmuch as his name had not figured previously in the case. The Georgian pointed out Lovett was Assistant Secretary of War for Air when the B-36 was first conceived.

Legislation In Legal Haze

By The Associated Press

Congress goes into extra innings this week, and some members who think it isn't legal are getting ready to blow the whistle.

Some Republicans say a cloud of uncertainty may hang over bills enacted hereafter.

The claim that action taken after July 31 is invalid grows out of the 1946 Congressional Reorganization Act which says that, except in time of war or national emergency, Congress shall adjourn not later than July 31 unless it orders otherwise.

It hasn't ordered otherwise, but is going ahead with business anyhow, perhaps through August or later.

Congressional leaders have decreed the 1946 adjournment deadline is not operative this year because the United States legally still is at war and the emergencies proclaimed by the President have not been ended.

The war, they held technically does not end until peace treaties are signed.

Republicans led by House GOP Leader Martin of Massachusetts think the war and national emergency argument is "flimsy" and have tried to get action on a resolution extending the session.

Martin told newsmen he would not be surprised to see the validity of any major bill enacted after July 31 challenged on the ground Congress is not legally in session. He said he saw no reason for failing to "play safe" and pass a resolution formally extending the session.

Some members, he said, undoubtedly will make "a point of order" against any bill called up, if it's controversial and important. That would lay the groundwork for future court tests.

Representative Jenkins (R., Ohio) said he would not make a formal challenge against bills, but, "if I were a lawyer and a client was affected by anything enacted after July 31, I certainly would make the point in court."

Attlee Warns British Labor

"he really knows very little of the facts."

"There are very frequent opportunities in the House of Commons . . . when these vague accusations of squandering and waste can be examined and answered, but Mr. Churchill is hardly ever in the House for more than a few minutes once a week," he said.

The Prime Minister said it was "disgraceful" to blame Britain's bad financial situation on "Socialist mismanagement," as Churchill did.

Attlee declared that "no one outside Bedlam (historic London lunatic asylum) ever suggested" that postwar Britain had achieved economic security.

He attacked Churchill's "mean and stupid" suggestion that Britain "borrowed with one hand from America and paid it out to other people."

"Did Mr. Churchill propose that we should leave all aid to the Americans?" the Prime Minister demanded. "Surely Mr. Churchill should know—after all, he has been Chancellor of the Exchequer—that most of the payments were made in sterling and we borrowed dollars to pay for things that could only be obtained from dollar countries."

He dismissed the Conservative claim that private ownership is better than nationalization with a brusque "tell that one to the Marines."

"Against (Conservative) promises, we set the solid achievements of four years of Labor Government . . ." he said.

Records Cited By Maragon

the Herald Tribune report. He declared:

"I'm not denying anything."

Then a few minutes later he denied he had made the statement, despite the verbatim notes taken down by the newsmen. When the latter pointed out this, he replied:

"I still say I simply refer you to the Government records."

According to the New York Herald Tribune story now being investigated by the Senate Subcommittee, Maragon had tried to avoid paying customs duty on the perfume essence by contending it was a gift for Mrs. Truman.

Returning from a trip abroad for his perfume firm, it was said, he had with him two packages addressed to George Drescher, then chief of the White House Secret Service detail.

He had tried to get them through without inspection, said the report, by stating that they were gifts for the President's wife and daughter, Miss Margaret Truman. Customs inspectors insisted on opening them and found dresses in one and a bottle of what purported to be champagne in the other, it was said. He then was assessed a duty of $1600 on the latter—when it was found to be rare perfume oil, according to the story.

The committee spokesman said they had not yet checked the story with customs officials and had no official documents on it before them.

Earlier, Maragon had told reporters that he had appeared before the Senate subcommittee because he had asked to be heard to clear his name of charges made by Drew Pearson.

Senator Clyde Hoey (D., N. C.), chairman of the Senate subcommittee, however, said Maragon's appearance was based not on any newspaper publication but on "information from other sources." He said the group's investigators had been "looking into the matter" prior to the publication of the Pearson column July 20.

One member of the subcommittee who declined to be quoted by name said they were investigating Maragon's "bank affairs, including his deposits in banks" as well as his income tax reports.

Maragon has been awell-known figure in Washington for years. At one time he was a Baltimore & Ohio agent on Capitol Hill, helping Congressmen with their reservations home. He still claims Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan, the President's military aide, as his "good friend."

While talking to reporters yesterday, he said he considered the "press has been very fair about this whole thing." Then he added:

"When your conscience is clear, you have nothing to fear."

OPEN STOCK "Wentworth" by Drexel

Shown in July Ladies' Home Journal

The new, open-stock Wentworth House Collection is planned by Drexel especially for those who appreciate careful, painstaking design and the important details, yet demand a modest price tag.

Wentworth House is hand-rubbed stripe mahogany, carefully chosen for fire and color, on selected cabinet hardwoods.

You'll find all the cabinet-maker extras traditional in this Drexel furniture—compartmented drawers, dust-proofed, center-guided, feather-touch opening, and dovetailed at all four corners; abundant hardwood glue blocks for extra strength; and sturdy, durable construction.

Wentworth House has many design features to gladden the eye—dentil moldings, rope or gadroon moldings, bracket feet, lovebird silhouettes over the mirror, and fluted, chamferred corners which make the collection look far more expensive than it really is. Deferred payments, if you wish.

Red Spies Reported Using U. N. as Cloak

Testimony of a self-described former Communist that Russia has used the United Nations to "reinforce" her spies in this country was made public last night by a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee.

The statement was made by Mrs. Ruth Fischer of New York City, a sister of Gerhart Eisler, the Communist leader who jumped bond and skipped the country after being convicted of passport fraud.

Mrs. Fischer testified behind closed doors at a meeting of the Senate Committee on May 10. She said she once was a leading member of the German Communist Party, but broke with the Communists in 1926 and became a United States citizen in 1947. She testified against Eisler at his trial.

In her hitherto secret testimony, she said that Soviet intelligence agents are hidden in the various Russian diplomatic, trade and other delegations that come to this country.

Reports Called "Real Job"

Ostensibly, she said, they are assigned to some routine function, but their "real job is to report on various phases of American society to Moscow headquarters."

"Recently this corps has been reinforced by the U. N. delegations of Russia and her satellites," Mrs. Fischer said.

She also testified that a French woman whom she described as "highly dangerous" had gained admittance to the United States "because her organization was recognized by Trygve Lie," Secretary General of the United Nations.

Only a week ago the Senate committee made public secret testimony of an unidentified "Witness No. 8," charging that the U. N. Secretariat headed by Lie is terrorized by Communist agents.

The committee, under the chairmanship of Senator McCarran (D., Nev.), is holding hearings on a bill of his that would arm the Government with new powers to block the entry of subversive aliens or force their deportation.

Mrs. Fischer identified the French woman to whom she referred as Marie-Claude Vaillant-Couturier, general secretary of the Women's International Democratic Federation, with headquarters in Paris.

The organization is "the principal Stalinist front in the women's field," Mrs. Fischer testified, and in the United States "has links to not only its affiliate, the Congress of American Women, but the Progressive Youth of America."

But she said that despite its "very clear and open record, the WIDF was granted by Trygve Lie, a B status, meaning that it is a consultative organization in the U. N."

At Lake Success the U. N. Department of Public Information issued a statement saying that neither Lie nor any member of his staff has any voice in granting consultative status to nongovernmental organizations.

The statement said that any organization can apply for such status. The application is considered by the Economic and Social Council's committee on nongovernmental organizations. The president of the council and representatives of China, France, Great Britain, the United States and Russia make up the committee, which recommends to the council whether or not the organization should be granted consultative status. The full 18-member council votes on the recommendation, the statement said.

Mrs. Fischer described Mme. Vaillant-Couturier as the widow of a leading French Communist and said the Frenchwoman, at the time of Mrs. Fischer's testimony, had been admitted to the United States because the WIDF was recognized by Lie.

She said Mme. Vaillant-Couturier "will attend the first constitutional convention of the Congress of American Women, which takes place right now."

This question and answer exchange then took place between a member of the committee staff and Mrs. Fischer:

Staff member: "What is the purpose of this woman's visit to the United States?"

Mrs. Fischer: "Propaganda against the United States, and organization of cells."

Staff member: "Communist cells?"

Mrs. Fischer: "Communist cells in all of the 48 States for affiliation with the Communist Party."

Staff member: "What is the nature of the visa which she received to be admitted to this country in the course of the last 10 days?"

Mrs. Fischer: "B status of United Nations organization. She came here in a semidiplomatic, not an official diplomatic, but semidiplomatic . . ."

Staff member: "As an invitee, or guest, of the U. N.?"

Mrs. Fischer: "Yes."

The witness then went on to say that "if I would set up a table of the single priority emergencies, I would regard her as highly dangerous out not No. 1, if I may add that."

Entered OSS, She Says

Mrs. Fischer also testified that Soviet agents had wormed their way into the International Refugee Organization and the super-secret Office of Strategic Services set up by the United States Government during the war.

Midway through her testimony Mrs. Fischer was quoted as saying:

"I have just read in the German newspapers and magazines I am getting regularly from Germany that both Thomas Mann and Heinrich Mann are saints of the Communist family. I have a great admiration for Thomas Mann as an artist, but as a politician has always decided with the Communists. and Heinrich Mann, his brother, was a king-pin in the fellow-traveling front of the German anti-Fascist Refugees in this country. I believe he would be the president of a pro-Communist Germany."

Colorado Uranium Called Ample For Atomic Work

By The Associated Press

Colorado's uranium deposits are ample to supply the Nation's vast atomic energy program, Senator Eugene D. Millikin (R., Colo.) said yesterday.

Similar assurance came from Senator Edwin C. Johnson (D., Colo.), who declared there is a "tremendous amount of uranium" in the Colorado plateau country.

Both Senators are members of the Senate-House Atomic Energy Committee.

They spoke out separately as the United Sates prepared to enter into "exploratory conversations" with Great Britain and Canada on a long-range program of collaboration in raw material supplies and exchange of atomic information.

"I have no fear that we cannot secure uranium to operate our atomic energy plants," Millikin told a reporter.

Clark's Record as Prosecutor May Follow Him to Bench

Attorney General Tom Clark could set an unusual record as a Supreme Court Justice during the next year or so—a record for having to excuse himself from judging certain cases.

That's partly because of the record President Truman's choice for the high bench has chalked up as Attorney General during the past four years.

In that post, he set in motion a grand total of 160 antitrust actions, as compared with the average of 42 such cases for each of his predecessors in the job.

Scores of these cases are still in litigation. Many of them are almost sure to wind up before the high tribunal.

Those pending in the lower courts include such prime actions as the recent suit to break up the duPont industrial empire; a move to force the Aluminum Company of America to dispose of many of its plants and properties; the demand that American Telephone and Telegraph Co. divorce its long-time subsidiary, Western Electric; a rate-fixing charge against the Association of American Railroads; and dissolution actions against the Investment Bankers Association of America and the Chicago Mortgage Bankers Assosiation.

And there is a list almost as long of cases in other fields, which also are likely to get to the Supreme Court eventually.

Among them are some of the postwar treason prosecutions, the espionage conviction of Judith Coplon, Justice Department employe; the current trial of top Communists in New York City; the Alger Hiss perjury prosecution, and a welter of deportation cases, tests of the Federal employe loyalty check program and diverse litigation over millions of dollars of alien property seized by the Justice Department during the war.

The question of disqualifying himself is decided by the justice himself, on the basis of degree of connection or association or activity.

The court itself has on occasion announced that it lacks a quorum to pass on a particular case without identifying which justices have disqualified themselves.

McGrath Talks to State Leaders on New Post

Narragansett, R. I., July 30 (AP). — United States Senator J. Howard McGrath, trying to make up his mind on accepting the Attorney Generalship of the United States, talked it over today with Rhode Island Democratic leaders.

Top party men who were there, however, said that McGrath would save his decision for a report to the President.

Observers said the succession to McGrath's Senate seat could involve the governorship, since Gov. John Pastore is reported ready to run for the Senate if McGrath takes the post.

Party leaders said they are betting McGrath will take the Cabinet post, but his own decision is not due until Monday in Washington.

East Coast Sailings Set to Break Strike

Honolulu, July 30 (AP).—A determined drive to break Hawaii's 91-day-old dock strike with regular sailings to and from the East Coast was announced today simultaneously with new efforts to end the dispute by direct negotiation.

Castle & Cooke, Ltd., local agents, announced the Isthmian line was undertaking 10-day sailings to and from Philadelphia, Baltimore and New York as a joint Isthmian-Matson service.

At the same time, three representatives each from the employers and the striking CIO union went into conference with a pledge of "all out" efforts to settle the strike by collective bargaining, the first such meeting since June 27.

At the end of a 65-minute meeting the negotiators announced "no progress" but said another meeting would be held Monday.

The Matson line, operating from California, normally carries the bulk of Hawaii's vital seaborne commerce, but has been tied up by the stevedore strike.

To Fly Pickets There

Matson announced yesterday it was loading a ship on the West Coast for future sailing to Hawaii. The strikers said they would fly pickets to California to patrol the loading berth.

The union declared today in San Francisco the step is strikebreaking and will mean resumption of the old West Coast maritime battle.

Loaded by nonunion labor and manned by an AFL union crew, the Isthmian's Steel Flyer sailed for Philadelphia last night with 6200 tons of Hawaiian sugar. This was the first cargo to leave the islands since the CIO International Longshoremens and Warehousemen's Union struck for higher wages May 1.

The ILWU is strong on the mainland West Coast but does not function on the East Coast, where stevedores are largely AFL.

Other Sailings Scheduled

Duncan McBryde, a Castle & Cooke executive, said the Isthmian's Steel Inventor would leave New York for Honolulu August 25, after picking up cargo in Baltimore and Philadelphia, and that the Steel Flyer would sail from New York September 2 for Honolulu. He said at least two or three other Isthmian ships now in Hawaiian waters would be used, and indicated additional ships might be charted.

Swift and contradictory developments in the strike that has paralyzed Hawaiian business included a public hearing this afternoon on a bill before the territorial Legislature to put the territorial government into the stevedoring business.

Hiram Fong, Speaker of the House, said also the union and representatives of the seven struck stevedoring companies were resuming direct negotiations this afternoon at the Governor's Palace.

Numerous attempts at direct settlement have failed, with the union standing pat on a demand for a 32-cent raise from its old $1.40 hourly wage. The highest employer offer, since withdrawn, was a 14-cent raise.

No Peace Near

Designers Sew to Meet Paris Strike

Paris, July 30 (U.P.).—Beautiful models and famous dress designers plied needles today in one of the most frantic sewing circles in the history of the fashion industry here.

In the stuffy back rooms of fashion houses famed couturiers and glamorous mannequins were trying to finish fall style collections by Monday despite the strike of 12,000 dressmaking "midinettes."

Sweat rolled from the brow of such designers as Pierre Balmain, who sat basting a dress of plush silk. In the steamy midsummer weather, Balmain wore only trousers, an undershirt and a thimble.

Christian Dior, designer generally credited with originating the "New Look," was almost in tears as he discussed the strike.

"I am so upset," he said. "I am not so tired as I am disgusted. All will be lost if this strike continues. There used to be a sentiment of solidarity in this house."

At union headquarters, a spokesman said there was "no change" in the deadlocked wage dispute.

The Fashion Employers' Association denied rumors that some houses had offered to compromise the midinettes' demand for a general 15-franc (5-cent) hourly wage increase.

1949 Housing Amendments Are Indorsed

In a letter to the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committees of the House and the Senate, Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, founder-president of the National Council of Negro Women, indorsed the housing amendments of 1949 and particularly emphasized the importance of provisions for direct governmental loans.

Stating that these loans would "meet a crucial need among racial minority groups," Mrs. Bethune submitted analyses of 1940 Census data on first mortgage holders, indicating: "(1) Commercial banks, savings banks, life insurance companies and mortgage companies hold a much smaller proportion of first mortgage for nonwhite occupants than for the total of mortgagors; (2) the highest proportion, almost one third, of the mortgages for nonwhite occupants are held by the individual mortgagees who charge the highest interest rate—6.52 per cent; (3) only for mortgages held by an agency of the Federal Government—the HOLC—is the interest rate the same as between the nonwhite mortgagors and the total; (4) in all other cases, the interest rates are higher."

The analysis concluded that "the nonwhite group, with the lowest economic capacity, has the greatest difficulty in securing mortgage credit in the first place, and pays most for it when it is available."

The letter continues: "Moreover, the council has been repeatedly advised by real estate operators that racial minority group home purchasers typically carry the high cost burden of second mortgages while such junior financing is generally considered to be obsolete.

"Our sole criticism of the amendments in this respect is that they would limit the direct loans only to cooperative and nonprofit housing. Actually, this source should be available under any circumstances where economically and structurally sound housing is obstructed solely because credit is withheld on discriminatory grounds. We urge your committee to take this serious deficiency into consideration. It is essential to afford racial minorities a truly equal opportunity to improve their housing conditions."

Red Maritime Probe Put Off to October

The House Un-American Activities Committee yesterday called off until October its scheduled investigation of communism in the maritime industry.

The postponement was agreed to after Joseph Curran, president of the CIO National Maritime Union, asked that his appearance be delayed until after the CIO's annual convention.

Curran had been listed as lead-off witness in the investigation which originally was set to begin next Tuesday.

Agriculture Group To Probe Hog Deaths

By The Associated Press

The Agriculture Department is investigating reports of unusually heavy death losses of hogs in parts of the Midwestern corn belt.

Dr. B. T. Simms, chief of the department's Bureau of Animal Industry, said representatives of his agency left last night for Iowa and Nebraska to investigate the reports.

Simms said he did not know what was causing the losses. When reports of losses do arise, he said, it usually turns out to be hog cholera.

Costa Rica-Bound, 2 Leave Takoma Park in Jeep

The Washington Post

NIEHAUS AND MONTGOMERY
Looking over the map . . .

Two young friends, with a lust for adventure, plan to start a 4200-mile jaunt in a jeep from here to Costa Rica this morning.

In the jeep will be Robert Montgomery, 20, a junior at Washington Missionary College in Takoma Park, Md., and Udo Niehaus, 19, a sophomore at Walla Walla College in the State of Washington. Niehaus' parents live in San Jose, the capital of Costa Rica.

The two expect be on the road three weeks, driving through Bristol, Nashville, Memphis, Little Rock and San Antonio, crossing into Mexico at Laredo, and heading through Central America for Costa Rica.

They expect paved roads most of the way, except for about 200 miles in the southern part of Mexico and the northern part of Costa Rica. There they will bump their way over ox-cart trails. Their jeep has cushions.

Much of the way in Central America will be through thick jungle with only Indian villages spotted here and there. The two figure they won't have too much trouble, however, since they have many friends scattered throughout that part of the country.

Anyway, their jeep is well stocked with camping equipment and food.

Montgomery and Niehaus both attended high school in San Jose. Montgomery's father, Carl Montgomery, now Dean of Men at Washington Missionary College, was teaching school in San Jose at the time.

The youths will visit relatives and friends in San Jose for about three weeks, then will fly back to the States, probably leaving the jeep with Niehaus' relatives.

Doctors to Aid U. S. Rheumatism Fight

Appointment of an advisory group of physicians and medical scientists to promote research in combating rheumatic diseases was announced yesterday by Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing.

The group will be headed by Dr. Philip Hench, of the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn. One function of the study section will be to explore the recently discovered possibilities of two substances, cortisone, popularly known as Compound E, and ACTH (adrenocorticotrophic hormone), which have displayed remarkable, though temporary, power to alleviate symptoms of patients suffering from rheumatoid arthritis, according to Surgeon General Leonard A. Scheele, of the Public Health Service, who appointed the group.

Dr. Hench and Dr. E. C. Kendall headed a Mayo Clinic group which first investigated the two compounds. Their findings were made known several weeks ago.

The advisory body will be known as the Arthritis and Rheumatism Study Section of the National Institutes of Health. In addition to Dr. Hench, members of the new group are:

Dr. Walter Bauer, Massachusetts General Hospital; Dr. Granville Bennett, University of Illinois School of Medicine; Dr. Jerome W. Conn, University of Michigan; Dr. W. Paul Holbrook, Tucson, Ariz.; Dr. Robert Loeb, New York College of Physicians and Surgeons; Dr. Fred Moore, University of Southern California School of Medicine; Dr. Jane A. Russell, Yale School of Medicine; Dr. Emil L. Smith, University of Utah School of Medicine and Dr. Alfred L. Wilds, professor of chemistry, University of Wisconsin.

Describing the seriousness of the problem the research program will try to solve, Dr. Scheele said that nearly 7 million individuals in the United States suffer from some form of rheumatism or arthritis. Of this number it is estimated that 200,000 are completely disabled and 800,000 more have partial disability.

Hospital Gets $12,500 for Indigent Care

The Arlington County Board yesterday appropriated $12,500 to Arlington Hospital to offset the cost of emergency care for non-county indigent patients.

The board also received a suggestion that the name of Lee blvd. be changed in order to avoid confusion with Lee hwy., but tabled the request, since it was informed such power is reserved to the State.

The sum voted the hospital was half the $25,000 requested for the purpose by Gilbert Hall, president of the Arlington Hospital Association. Board Member Freeland Chew moved that the board express its regrets that the $12,500—total sum earmarked for such use in the county budget—could not be doubled.

The request to change the name of Lee blvd. came from the Arlington American Legion Council. The council asked that the name be changed to "American Legion blvd. or some other appropriate name."

Board member Daniel Duggan offered an unseconded motion that the boulevard be named "Stonewall Jackson blvd."

Chew, after pointing out that the naming of the boulevard is strictly a State business, continued: "I submit the boulevard runs through the fighting areas of the Civil War and I suggest it might be appropriate to name it 'Battle Boulevard'."

The board in other matters received a statement from County Manager A. T. Lundberg that insurance on the Clarendon library totaling $17,500 will be more than adequate to cover damages caused by a recent fire. Board member Duggan had requested the information because he said he had heard rumors the library "wasn't adequately covered."

Arlington School Repair Costs Shown

The annual report of the Arlington Public School administration discloses a total of $210,755.07 spent for repair and remodeling of seven school buildings during the 1949 fiscal year out of regular operating funds.

In addition, funds totaling $420,759.32 were paid out of the school bond construction fund, leaving $1,367,077.72 still in the fund. (A second $4,750,000 bond issue, approved by voters at the last election, has not yet been sold.)

Money from the bond fund has purchased sites for the Glencarlyn and Greenbrier Street schools and paid for additions completed or under way to the Walter Reed, Kate Waller Barrett, Peyton-Randolph, Stonewall Jackson and Woodlawn Schools, the report showed.

A total of $42,673.71 remained in the schools' operating fund on June 30, according to the report.

The surplus appeared, despite the fact that school expenditures exceeded the budget by about $77,000—due chiefly, according to school officials, to unanticipated State grants.

J. R. Connelly Gets Diabetes Association Post

J. Richard Connelly, assistant secretary of the District Medical Society, has been appointed executive director of the American Diabetes Association.

Connelly

His appointment to the fulltime post, beginning Monday, was announced jointly last night by Dr. John A. Reed of this city, secretary, and Dr. Howard F. Root of Boston, president of ADA.

Connelly will leave Monday for Boston to complete planning with Dr. Root for the coming diabetes detection drive, a national campaign to help uncover the estimated one million unknown diabetics. The drive is scheduled for the week of October 10-16.

Later, the executive director's headquarters will be established in Washington though the executive director's time will necessarily be divided between here, the association's executive offices in New York, and its editorial office in Philadelphia. The appointment also includes the position of business manager of the organization's publications, including the "ADA Forecast."

The American Diabetes Association was incorporated in 1940 to foster diabetes research, and dispense scientific information to the medical profession. It provides public health information about diabetes and allied diseases, and sponsors many community services in this field.

Connelly served as assistant to Theodore Wiprud, executive secretary of the District Medical Society, for the past three and one half years.

A native of Detroit, Mich., Connelly received his A. B. degree in political science and socio-economics from American University, this city, in 1939. For three years prior to World War II and service with the Army's Armored Headquarters Command, he was sales manager of Professional Business Services. He was also secretary for one year of the Doctors Budget Bureau, here.

Connelly is 32, married, and has two children. He lives at 215 North Glebe rd., Arlington, Va.

Tonight the park service offers star-gazing with telescopes at the Rock Creek Park Campfire site near 16th and Colorado ave. nw.

Falls Kill One And Injure 55 In Week Here

Falls in Washington homes last week took one life and were the greatest source of home injuries, the District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service revealed yesterday.

A total of 55 persons suffered from accidental falls while 88 others required hospital treatment for burns, poisonings, foreign bodies, cuts, bruises and miscellaneous accidents.

As usual children's appetities showed more tolerance than their stomachs. They tried lye, insecticides and clothes bleach, all with injurious reactions. Other children lost teeth in falls. One was shot in the eye with a bee bee by a playmate.

Among adult accidents was a young woman who suffered burns while filling a washing machine. Another burned her back when she sat in lye.

Proposed Hotel Site to Be Sold

The 120-acre Corby tract on Rockville pike near Bethesda, suggested during the war as site of the Nation's costliest hotel, will go on the auction block August 17.

The auction, it was learned yesterday, will be held on the steps of the Montgomery County Courthouse in Rockville, the result of failure of Diplomat Properties, Inc., of New York, to make necessary payments on its mortgage.

When the corporation acquired the property five years ago for a reported $20,000, corporation spokesmen announced plans for a 20-million-dollar resort-type hotel of 1000 rooms to be erected as soon after the war as materials and labor were available. Facilities were to include a golf course, tennis courts and a swimming pool.

The site is diagonally across the Rockville Pike-Garret Park rd. intersection from Georgetown Preparatory School.

Collapse of the plan was indicated in August, 1947, when the land was rezoned back to single family dwelling classification in accordance with a proviso that construction must be begun by then or the commercial listing would be withdrawn.

Under the auction's terms, the purchaser is to pay all cash, with a $10,000 deposit required at the time of the sale. The balance must be paid within five days after the sale is approved by the Circuit Court.

Trustees in charge of the sale will be Robert Peter, Rockville attorney, and William K. Copenhaver, president of the Suburban Title and Investment Co., 925 15th st. nw.

Alexandria Narrows Search For Manager to 4 Candidates

Alexandria has narrowed its search for a city manager to four experienced candidates, and the City Council is conducting personal interviews with each.

City Councilman R. Samuel Luckett, chairman of the committee appointed to seek applications, said his group had cut the original list of 30 applicants to 12 and that the whole council had screened the rest.

The council has interviewed two of the four. The other two will meet the council in closed sessions on Monday and Tuesday.

Luckett gave no indication when the council would announce the appointment.

The present manager, Robert S. Marshall, jr., took the position temporarily last winter after the council suddenly dismissed Nicholas A. Colasanto. Marshall has been granted a leave of absence until October 1 from the Alexandria Redevelopment and Housing Authority, of which he is executive director.

Death Threats Made In Gary Vice Drive

At Alice, Texas

Guns Blast Dance Hall After Slaying

SAM SMITHWICK

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

W. H. MASON

Alice, Tex., July 30 (AP).—Five men blasted a dime-a-dance palace with shotgun fire before dawn today, less than 24 hours after W. H. Mason, crusading radio commentator, had been slain.

The dance hall was unoccupied at the time.

Mason had criticized operation of the establishment in broadcasts and stated it was owned by Sam Smithwick, 60-year-old deputy sheriff.

Smithwick is in jail, charged with murder in connection with Mason's death. Smithwick jailed himself after the shooting yesterday.

Public feeling ran high in this south Texas oil and cattle town near the great King Ranch. Three Texas rangers patrolled the community to preserve order.

The raid, by five men in two automobiles, occurred early this morning, said Ben Krueger, a ranger.

Mason, 51, who officers said was unarmed, was shot yesterday as he sat in his automobile. He was program director of Station KBKI and a veteran newspaperman who had worked on newspapers throughout the United States.

Gary, Ind., July 30 (U.P.).—Members of a housewives' committee crusading against vice in Gary have been threatened with death by anonymous callers and spied on by wire tappers, leaders of the campaign said today.

Several telephone threats have been made during the past two days when members of the Women's Citizens Committee picketed handbooks and brothels to clamp a lid on vice in this steel city.

Leaders said their two-day picketing campaign was successful and pointed to reports from Indianapolis that four Gary prostitutes had turned up there.

Mrs. Russell T. Griffith, chairman of the committee, said the latest of innumerable threats against her life came yesterday. A man told her on the telephone that she would be killed if she "didn't lay off the heat."

Mrs. Griffith, 35-year-old mother of two small children, laughed at the threats.

The housewives ended their picketing of bawdy and gambling houses last night and drew criticism from Mayor Eugene Swartz for their activities. Swartz charged that members of the committee frequent a country club which featured strip teasers, poker games and $200-pot crap games. He suggested the police were doing their job and suggested that the women picket the country club which is outside city limits.

Beauty Finalists Chosen

Expose of 'Numbers' Swindle Uncovers 'Double Gyp'

Newark brokerage house and relay the first two numbers of the day's winner to "bank" headquarters. Meanwhile, numbers runners who pick up the bets each day have phoned in the numbers and the bets.

Number Phoned In

By quick calculation, the numbers leaders could figure on which final number they would have to pay the least in winnings. They would telephone this number, in vaguely disguised codes, to an agent in New York, Scotti said.

This agent, at exactly 1:45 p. m. daily, would call Duble, 59-year-old distinguished-looking secretary-manager of the Cincinnati Clearing House, who has given Hogan's office a description of the swindle, Scotti said.

Again, in thinly disguised code, Duble would be told what number the ring wished to have appear as the second digit in the Cincinnati report. This report would be given to the United Press in Cincinnati in the requested order, according to Scotti, and transmitted there by wire to New York, arriving in time for the late afternoon papers.

But despite these elaborate precautions, the numbers leaders were not yet through guaranteeing themselves a maximum return and the numbers players a minimum return, Scotti described.

The district attorney has charged that two members of the numbers ring were employed at the Journal-American, in which the winning number was printed and on the basis of which winnings were paid.

The Journal-American employes were charged with the responsibility of insuring that the winning number as printed in that paper should coincide with the number as determined by the noon bond sales report and the number prepared for the Cincinnati Clearing House in Newark.

Betz, one of the two Journal-American employes, is a former convict with a record of 12 arrests and two convictions and was an intermediary in the Lindbergh kidnaping case. He was a circulation inspector and Goldberg was city circulation manager.

Figures Checked, Rechecked

Hogan said they personally checked the Cincinnati Clearing House figure received by UP tickers in the Jornal-American office to see that it coincided with the figure given them by the numbers leaders. Hogan said they checked the Cincinnati figure again in proof and then rechecked it finally in the paper. He told reporters of one occasion when an "erroneous" Cincinnati figure appeared in one edition of the paper and was changed in later editions.

"A numbers lottery to be successful must have the cooperation of at least one newspaper of wide circulation," Hogan said. "The thousands of numbers bettors must be able to find out which number won on any given day. They would never take the word of a numbers runner.

"If the newspapers would refuse to publish the information from which the winning number can be calculated, the big numbers combines would be hard put to continue," Hogan said.

When asked if he contemlpated prosecution of newspapers which do publish this informatilon for aiding and abetting a crime Hogan replied, "If we could prove knowledge on the part of the newspaper, prosecution would be a possibility."

When asked if he thought those newspapers which published this information knew the information was used by numbers players, Hogan declined to comment.

United Press officials in New York yesterday said they had supplied New York "points" with the Cincinnati Clearing House figures n request for at least 10 years and that no one in the office couid remember who first asked for the igures. They said Cincinnati was he only figure city for which learing house reports were carried.

Journal American circulation nanager Hugh Smith refused to comment on any aspect of Goldberg or Bitz's arrest and Hogan's harges.

The winning number also is ublished in the New York Mirror, ut in no other paper. Both the Mirror and the Journal-American re controlled by William Randolph Hearst.

Still At Work

The "grapevine" in New York today reported that though Hogan's expose has put a crimp n operations of the ring, it still is continuing and making its payoff according to parimutuel figures from New Jersey race tracks.

Hogan would not comment on the connection of the Duble numbers ring and other national syndicates. He said he knew of no specific connection between this ring and any combine now operating in Washington.

The district attorney said law enforcement was the only way to break up the combines. In investigating the Duble syndicate Hogan said a staff of 10 to 20 detectives, plus some investigators, accountants and assistant district attorney's worked for 18 months.

"These boys spend thousands of dollars trying to evade the law and unfortunately we have to spend a lot of time and money trying to catch them."

Details of the investigation of the numbers combine and the arrest of the seven were given by Assistant District Attorneys Scotti and Robert Marchetti.

Hogan's office was investigating what they described as "routine racketeers" when they ran into a numbers ring "bank" operating on Staten Island. On the theory this "bank" was involved with others, the district attorneys let Staten Island police make arrests there to avoid any suspicion of a full-scale crackdown.

With more investigating, presumably with wire-tapping, legal in New York State although not New Jersey, the trail led to Newark, to the brokerage house on the corner of 4th and Walnut sts. there, and eventually to the ring's New York agent. This agent received each day the information on the least-played number to forward to Duble in Cincinnati, Scotti said.

Knew of Calls

Scotti said they knew the ring's New York agent, allegedly a poolroom operator named Edward Kane, was calling Cincinnati, but they did not know for months to whom he called. Finally, they learned Duble's identity. Scotti said they already were investigating the obvious paradox that the winning number in New York should be determined by figures from a comparatively obscure Midwestern clearing house.

A representative of the district attorney's office called on Duble, posing as a job-seeker, close to 1:45 p. m. one day. The call from New York was late that day, however, and the assistant district attorney already had been turned down and was forced to leave the 30-foot-square director's room to which Duble went each day to receive the New York call. But like the trained investigator he was, he had reluctantly left his brief case behind beneath a table.

When he heard Duble's telephone ring seconds after he had left, the assistant district attorney returned, ostensibly to retrieve his brief case. He overheard enough to convince Hogan and Scotti this was their man. Marchetti then was sent to Cincinnati to "face Ruble down," Scotti said.

After first denying the story, Duble then told Marchetti the complete story, Scotti said, implicating the Eastern combine. Duble waved extradition and returned willingly to New York, where he is expected to turn State's evidence.

The reason Cincinnati and its clearing house was used as the source of the third number for New Jersey and Staten Island lottery bettors has puzzled observers here.

Police believe it harks back to the days of the famous "Dutch" Schultz, who put together the largest numbers empire ever seen in New York with bullets and blackjacks back in the early '30s.

In those days, the Dutchman decreed that New York numbers players should be paid off on the basis of mutuel figures at Cincinnati's Coney Island track. Therein lies a fabulous tale.

According to the testimony in 1933 of George Weinberg, who had bossed Schultz's numbers empire, a mathematical wizard, named Abadaba, or Avisack, or Otto Berman or Otto Biederman, manipulated the mutuels at Coney Island.

Abadaba reportedly waited until the minute before the mutuels were about to close and then cast up the totals each horse would pay if he won, placed or showed. He then would add up the totals for any combination of all the horses.

He would have previously informed himself from New York what winning mutuel numbers would put the mob back home in the soup. If his lightning calculations led him to believe that Dutch was in trouble, Abadaba would place enormous bets on what he considered the likely finishers, thus changing the number winning back in New York.

Legend had it that Abadaba got $10,000 a week for his talents. And it is all legend. For the same bullets that felled Dutch felled the mathematical wizard in Newark, in October of 1935.

45 Are Overcome By Blast Fumes

Gibbsboro, N. J., July 30 (U.P.).—A general alarm fire broke out at the big John Lucas Paint Co. factory here today and set off a series of explosions that rocked the countryside for 25 miles around.

Forty-five firemen who fought the blaze were overcome by fumes from exploding naphtha and lacquer tanks. Twenty-five of those overcome were taken to hospitals.

State police evacuated families from more than 30 houses in the vicinity, but they were allowed to return to their homes when the blaze was brought under control actions now are awaiting hearing.

Getting D. C. Divorce Like Falling Off Log

Nor is comfort to be had in the fact that the divorce rate is down from the high-water mark after the war. The decline is merely from an extremely abnormal situation when wartime marriages were breaking up.

Ironically, the divorce rate may be said to be leveling off to a high "normality," with 2507 cases filed the year ending June, 1948, and 2510 the year ending June, 1949.

Like 'Falling Off A Log'

Such, briefly, is the status here of one of twentieth century man's chief tribal customs.

To bring you some of its fabulous warp and woof, The Washington Post has consulted authorities ranging from the "private eye"—who for $300 or so up will trail your husband—to the psychoanalyst—who for $15 an hour may settle your marital problems in a considerably different fashion.

The Post has consulted these authorities—and in some cases observed their particular techniques in actual operation. It has talked to divorce lawyer, minister, District Court judge, to the domestic relations commissioner, who sees one of the most tragic aspects of divorce—the children of broken homes.

The circumstance of this series, following "Father of the Bride," it remains to be said now, is a pure coincidence and in no way originates in a sense of sadism toward newborn fathers-in-law.

How hard is it to get a divorce in the District?

"Just exactly as hard, young man," cryptically said an elderly, white-haired official in the District Court celrk's office who has handled thousands of divorce filings, "as falling off a log."

Said a District Court judge: "The ease with which divorces can be obtained here causes a lot of people to rush to the court who wouldn't otherwise rush, but would straighten out their own affairs at home.

Desertion Leads Field

Others, of course, believe modern times call for laws which enable two persons sick of living together to do something about it without too much trouble. At any rate the legal facts here are:

Grounds for absolute divorce are: Desertion for two years; voluntary separation for five years; adultery; conviction of a felony with a two-year or more sentence for a crime involving moral turpitude.

Desertion, as might be expected since its requires only two years apart, leads the field.

Cruelty—that word which in divorce parlance covers such a multitude of activities—is grounds for a "limited divorce." This species is obtained for several reasons, often by wives who vindictively don't want to free their husbands to marry the other woman.

It may be enlarged, after two years of separation, into an absolute divorce—but, significantly, only by the injured party.

Divorce decrees do not become final until six months after issued—a provision aimed at discouraging development of a divorce mill. Another sort of brake on divorce: one year residence is required if the cause of action arises in the District, two years if it arises outside.

Such legal terms as "desertion" and "voluntary separation" of course do not give the slightest clew to the real causes for which most Washingtonians get divorces.

It is striking to note that some of the older, and in this respect perhaps more honest, civilizations were far more inclined to call a spade a spade in their divorce laws—starting outright the actual reasons for which husbands and wives even to this day part ways.

In the Rome of the Justinian Code, for example, a wife could divorce her husband for, "after warning, frequenting a house in the same town with any woman other than his wife." And a wife herself could be divorced for "going to the circus theater or amphitheater without the knowledge of, or contrary to the prohibition of, her husband."

In ancient China the "seven justifying causes" for which a man could divorce his wife were barrenness, lasciviousness, disregard of the husband's parents, talkativeness, thievish propenities, envious and suspicious temper and inveterate infirmity."

Even in today's Aleutian Islands the law frankly spells out the real cause which not infrequently is behind what here is called "desertion:" In that northern clime, a husband can divorce his wife when household work and bearing his children have lost for her what looks she once may have had.

Many a Washington woman, speaking of "voluntary separation," doubtless has got a divorce for the reason given by the Kaffirs: If the husband fails to dress her in the manner to which she is accustomed, she may leave him.

Of course, one does not have to go farther than just across the Potomac to find a list of grounds somewhat more colorful than those pertaining in the District.

8 Grounds In Virginia

In Virginia, grounds for divorce are eight in number: Adultery; impotency; conviction of a felony; pre-marital conviction of an infamous offense unknown to other spouse at time of marriage; being a fugitive from justice for two years after having been indicted on a felony charge; desertion for two years; wife having been pregnant by another man at time of marriage without husband's knowledge; wife having been a prostitute without husband's knowledge of fact at time of marriage.

But in the Old Dominion, also, that wonderful divorce-law word "desertion" is the one which turns up most frequently in court.

In Virginia a year's residence is required before starting divorce proceedings. Divorces become final as soon as issued except in desertion cases, where the period of desertion must reach two years before the spouses are legally free of each other—the suit on desertion grounds can be started, however, as soon as one spouse leaves the other.

Reasons In Maryland

In Maryland, grounds for divorce include: adultery; desertion for 18 months; voluntary separation for three years; incurable insanity after the defendant has been hospitalized for at least three years; sentence to three years or more on a felony conviction provided the defendant has served at least 18 months of the sentence; impotency. Any evidence of fraud, coercion or duress which would be accepted as grounds for annulment can also be used to file suit for absolute divorce. As in the District, Maryland grants a limited divorce only on grounds of cruelty.

The Maryland Free State is freer on the residence requirement: If you have been a resident only one day and the court is satisfied you really came to Maryland to live and not just to get rid of your wife or husband you can start divorce proceedings—provided the cause arose within the State. If the cause arises outside the State, a year of residence is required.

Maryland divorces become final on the date the decree is handed down, but the parties have to wait 30 days before remarrying—that being the period allowed for an appeal from the court's decision.

The "grounds" picture in Washington is complicated further by different interpretations, different judges sometimes, quite naturally, give to the law.

In the case cited above, a judge showed disinclination toward a divorce action based on failure of a $65,000-a-year lobbyist and his wife to share the marriage bed.

But in another case a divorce was granted to a 63-year-old woman here who lived with her husband under the same roof for 15 years, but declined to share with him not only her bedroom but also her dining room.

The wife slept in the basement and the husband, a church organist, slept on the second floor with the door locked. So allergic were they to each other that they used the dining room at different times. The Court of Appeals, reversing a lower court ruling, granted a divorce on grounds of voluntary separation: "The essential thing is not separate roofs, but separate lives."

The divorce case, it can be noted in this connection, provides the modern court with material for the most significant interpretation of the whole base and purpose of man's primary social unit, the family.

Thus it was that last year Great Britain's highest court reversed a lower court decision that persistent use of contraceptives by a wife against her husband's will constituted a refusal to consummate the marriage.

Unanimously the court ruled that production of children "does not appear to be a principal end of marriage as understood in Christendom" and that refusal of parenthood was not a ground for annulment in marriage.

Speaking of the British, there is a paragraph closing the article on "Divorce" in an older-vintage Encyclopedia Britannica—the 1929—which, better perhaps than anything you'll find in a long season of current reading on the subject, sums up what many feel to be the crucial sociological conflict divorce poses in this country:

"It is difficult, perhaps impossible, to say how far the frequency of divorce in the United States has been or is a social injury; or to what extent it has weakened or undermined the ideal of marriage as a lifelong union.

"Morally Deteriorating"

"The belief in the family as an institution ordained of God, decreed to continue 'till death us do part' . . . probably became weakened in the United States during the nineteenth century, along with a weakening of other religious conceptions; and it is yet to be determined whether a substitute for these ideas can be developed under the guidance of the motive of social utility or individual desire."

The Britannica, in its incomparable 1929 style, then adds:

"In this respect the United States is, as Gladstone once wrote, a tribus praerogativa (loosely: 'morally deteriorating society'), but we need not too readily despond of the outcome"

Let us hope not.

From here let us step, with a long stride, into one of Washington's most secret and amazing chambers: the office of a well-heeled divorce lawyer.

(Tomorrow: "In the center of the giant ashtray lay a crumpled cigarette butt, ringed with lipstick . . ." Read what happens when a troubled spouse comes into the divorce lawyer's office . . . what she says . . . what he, keeping always close by a box of Kleenex, answers . . . and how the lawyer, Commanding General of the divorce operation, goes into action with his many regiments . . .)

Kentucky Girl's Murder Charged to Carnival Man

Hazard, Ky., July 30 (U.P.).—The curiosity of a deputy sheriff's wife today led to placing of murder charges against a carnival worker in the slaying of 17-year-old Muriel Baldridge at Prestonburg, Ky., last June 27.

A murder warrant was issued against William Gamble, 26, of Happy, Ky. He was taken to a jail somewhere in eastern Kentucky. The location was kept secret.

Gamble had been arrested at Abingdon, Va., on a stolen car charge. He was wanted here on an earlier storehouse-breaking count. Deputy Sheriff Elmer Holliday accompanied by his wife, went to Abingdon July 15 to pick him up.

On the way back to Hazard, Holliday drove past a carnival at Pound, Va. Gamble remarked that he was a carnival worker by trade. Mrs. Holliday, recalling that Muriel was attacked on her way home from a carnival, asked the prisoner if he had been in Prestonburg with the show.

When Gamble said he had, Holliday became suspicious. He called Floyd County Sheriff Troy Sturgill at Prestonburg, who came here to question Gamble.

It was found that Olin Collins, 15, of Salyersville, Ky., had been jailed with Gamble in Virginia, but later released. Asked about the slaying, Collins last night made a statement implicating Gamble.

Collins said he hitched a ride with Gamble the night of the murder. He said Gamble picked up Muriel forcibly, drove about three miles out of town, stopped the car and took her into a cornfield. When they returned, she was crying, and the carnival worker hit her on the head with a large screwdriver, Collins told authorities.

They then drove back to the bridge near Muriel's home, where Gamble took her down by the bank of the river. He came back later alone, Collins said.

Questioned here this morning, Gamble said, "I don't know anything about it."

State Orchards Hit by 'Hoppers'

University of Maryland entomologists reported yesterday that grasshoppers are posing a threat to apple and peach orchards in three Maryland counties.

The hoppers have invaded Washington, Harford and Montgomery Counties, the University Extension Service said. Orchardists were urged to spray the ground and lower limbs of their trees with chlordane. They were warned not to spray during the last three weeks of harvest next fall.

Banker Faces Policy Racket Questioning

New York, July 30 (U.P.).—District Attorney Frank Hogan said today that Dennison Duble, Cincinnati banker accused of rigging Clearing House figures in a 50 million dollar policy racket, would be questioned extensively during the weekend in an effort to track down other members of the policy ring.

Hogan said Duble, 57-year-old secretary of the Cincinnati Clearing House Association, was "opening the door" for more arrests. It was expected the silver-haired banker, disgruntled at being made a "dupe" by other ring members, would turn State's evidence when he appears before a grand jury early next week.

Duble was reported to have complained bitterly today that Eastern policy racketeers paid him "dribs and drabs" of $5 and $6 a week to rig the figures which netted them an estimated 50 million dollars annually.

Besides Duble, 10 men, including six New Yorkers, have been arrested in the policy racket.

Duble, paroled under police protection, told Hogan he had received $100 only five or six times during the two years he worked with the policy syndicate. Hogan hinted he believed Duble's take was much higher.

Kefauver Defends 4 Rule Bill Points

of consideration" but he added that most of them are "relatively minor in nature and should not delay action on the bill." He said some could be adopted by the House itself or in conference between the two houses of Congress.

Summary of Statements

Here is the gist of Kefauver's statements on the four major provisions:

1. The Commissioners questioned the advisability of excluding appointed District officials from serving on the council. Kefauver said that in practice few would be affected. As to Federal employes, he pointed out that about 20 per cent of the District's adult population works for the Government.

If any Federal worker, serving on the council, was faced with a question involving his own Federal agency, he could refrain from voting, Kefauver said, as do judges in similar instances.

Kefauver said a Federal worker should be permitted to serve on the council because "he probably has a special acquaintance with public affairs which would increase his value as a councilman," he probably has lived here for years, owns a home, pays real estate and other taxes and sends his children to District schools.

If Federal workers are not permitted to serve on the council, Kefauver said, they would turn to Congress to protect their interests "and the stage would be set for conflicts between Congress and the council over the conduct of local affairs."

2. Kefauver said the legislative veto provision—Congress would have 30 days in which to disapprove a council action—is "generally conceded" to be constitutional, despite the Commissioners' questioning of that point. He noted that Congress has the same veto power over executive reorganization plans and he added that the Board of Trade had not raised the point in its opposition to home rule.

3. The Commissioners declared the burden of financing bond issues would fall primarily on real estate owners. Kefauver pointed out his bill provides that all tax revenue, not just that from real estate, is to apply against bond issue costs.

He said the 5 per cent debt limitation in the bill is "conservative" in comparison with that in other cities and he noted that no bond issue is valid until approved by a majority vote in a referendum.

Kefauver said it is "a well established principle of public finance" that capital improvements be paid for over a period of years and he added that such a procedure would spread the necessary taxes over the years. Each class of taxpayer would pay his "equitable share" and "as a result taxes would not be raised."

4. The Commissioners also objected "to extending the privilege of voting to those who are not domiciled in the District or who retain voting privileges elsewhere" and argued that only "permanent residents" be permitted to vote.

Sees Fundamental Error

Kefauver said this argument contains a "fundamental error," the "attempt to distinguish between 'permanent' and 'temporary' residents, between Federal employes and 'the people of the District.'"

"This is a false dichotomy," he added. "To suppose that the 'genuine' people of the District are a few native sons is contrary to fact."

He concluded with this paragraph:

"The argument that bond issues might be voted by persons here only for a period of years and paid by the 'permanent residents' is based upon the same false assumption that there are two kinds of people in Washington—the floating population and the permanent residents.

"All the people of the city have a stake in its capital improvements—its schools, hospitals, highways, etc. And all taxpayers will help pay the carrying charges on such bond issues. Nowhere in the United States is the right to vote on bond issues limited to the so-called 'permanent residents' of a community."

they heard two shots. They broke through the locked door of Hatter's apartment, they said, and found Brampton on the floor, bleeding. Police said a bullet had entered the front of his throat and passed completely through his neck. He was taken to Emergency Hospital.

The police said they picked up a .45-caliber Army-type automatic pistol on the floor, and dug one bullet from the wall and another from the floor. They took fingerprints from the weapon but did not disclose their findings.

Neighbors said that Mrs. Hatter is away from the city on a vacation with her infant, born a few months ago.

Only Minor Bills Face D. C. House Group on Monday

The House District Committee will hold its regular monthly meeting at 10 a. m. Monday with only minor bills up for consideration.

Chairman John L. McMillan (D., S. C.) said he did not expect District home rule to come up at the meeting. He said he would await subcommittee action before determining what course to take in the full committee.

Scheduled for consideration are bills to permit insurance companies to invest in International Bank securities, permit banks to combine small trust accounts, make technical changes in the District group insurance laws and amend the group life insurance law to permit firms with less than 25 employes to participate.

New Cleaner Not Perfected Yet, Dental Unit Says

Chicago, July 30 (AP).—The American Dental Association says "don't expect too much from your new ammoniated tooth cleaner as a preventive of decay." It asked that you "brush your teeth with tongue in cheek."

The association's journal said in an editorial today that the effects of using ammoniated dentifrices are still not fully evaluated, and many claims made for them are not warranted by present scientific evidence.

It added that although there are good indications ammoniated dentifrices will help substantially in battling tooth decay, it will take at least a year for proper evaluation.

Packing Plant Closed Until Hog Prices Drop

Wilmington, Del., July 30 (AP).—A Wilmington meat processing plant was shut down today and it'll stay closed, its president said, "until farmers start asking reasonable prices for livestock."

"We can't keep fattening up the farmers," said Abe Goldman, president of the 300-employe Wilmington Provision Co.

"The big packers are losing millions and they may be able to afford it," Goldman said, "but we can't. We are through until they are willing to sell at prices we can afford."

The plant, which has a weekly payroll of about $18,000, specializes in processing hogs.

Red Merchant Ships Fail in World Trade

New York, July 30 (AP).—Russia, expected to become a leading competitor in merchant shipping after the war, has failed to do so, the American Merchant Marine Institute said today.

The institute, an organization of shipping operators, said the Red merchant fleet is less a factor along world sea lanes than it was before the war despite acquisition of German ships and the retention of 86 American lend-lease ships.

The institute statement said Russian freight vessels maintain no regular service and only a small number of them trade outside Soviet waters.

Sales Tax to Delay Budget Hearings

'Use Levy' Bar

Tax Officials See No Rush To Virginia

Last of a Series

Washington sales tax officials don't anticipate that many D. C. residents will go to Virginia Monday in an attempt to beat the tax.

They expect Old Dominion merchants to add the "use tax" on sales of substantial items delivered to District homes.

If the Virginia dealers neglect to do so, Sales Tax Administrator Allan F. Brooke has "the power, without any question, to halt trucks" making deliveries of goods on which taxes have not been imposed. Building materials firms will be closely watched.

Brooke anticipates "some difficulty with out-of-town people, just as we will have some with a few here."

The District sales tax is bolstered by a companion levy known as the "use tax." This is to be collected by Maryland and Virginia retailers on sales of commodities delivered to District residents. Out-of-the-District merchants expecting such sales are required to apply for sales tax registration certificates.

When the sales tax was instituted in Maryland more than two years ago, Free State retailers waged a campaign against it, forming organizations and taking the matter into the courts in a vain attempt to repeal the tax. A principal contention was the tax would drive business over the line to other States.

In Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties the charge was made that District firms would gain a heavy advantage. Over a period of months this idea "vanished into thin air," according to Walter E. Kennedy, Maryland sales tax head.

The Maryland official said that "on the whole, we have received cooperation." Since July 1, 1947, when the tax became effective, about 50 firms have been prosecuted for noncompliance. "We have kept three lawyers plenty busy, but this is not bad in handling 50,000 dealers" he declared.

The series published in The Washington Post on the sales tax will be reprinted in pamphlet form. Free copies will be available to all Washington retail business establishments and may be ordered by telephoning National 4200, extension 331.

Silver Spring Board Indicates Cooperation

The Silver Spring Board of Trade already has indicated cooperation in the collection of District sales taxes, and several members have filed applications for certificates of registration. Some Free State vendors are clearly pleased about the District tax, saying, "This finally puts us on the same basis."

In nearby Virginia, a clear indication of how dealers will react to the local sales tax has not yet developed. Paul A. Hill, secretary of the Arlington Chamber of Commerce said few dealers made deliveries into the District and "I suppose they will cooperate."

Carl H. Hink, secretary of the Falls Church Chamber of Commerce, said the group will discuss the tax at a luncheon meeting Monday.

One of the two largest department stores in the area—Sears, Roebuck and Co. has registered its Clarendon outlet for the tax and will collect on deliveries to Washington residents. The other large establishment, J. C. Penney Co., which has a store in Alexandria and another in Clarendon, makes no deliveries, and therefore has no plans for tax collections.

A spot check of other nearby Virginia merchants indicated only casual interest in the tax and a wait-and-see attitude on whether t would improve business.

Preliminary hearings on the fiscal 1951 District budget probably will be delayed a month in the fall to permit the Commissioners to examine the first months' returns from the sales tax.

This was disclosed yesterday by a top city budget official who explained that the present estimated sales levy yield of about 13½ million annually was admittedly "only an educated guess and probably on the conservative side."

He said that after September 20, when August collections will be in, the city heads should have a more accurate figure on additional revenue available for the new budget.

But not until the sales tax operates through the Christmas rush period, he said, will the city budget makers know precisely how much new money they can count upon.

Banking on getting "at least a trend" from the September sales tax collection figure, the Commissioners will not hold their budget hearings with department heads until sometime in October, the official said. Normally these hearings begin the middle of September.

Though city government departments were directed to submit their spending estimates for fiscal '51 by last Friday, less than half of them have responded thus far. They have been given another two days to complete their estimates.

Best conjecture last night on how much the city's spending plans might rise next year over the current record high 103-million-dollar budget was placed at about five millions.

And that fiscal belt loosener—thanks to the 2 per cent retail tax—will be translated almost entirely into capital improvements, such as schools, welfare and health institutions and sewer projects of high priority.

2% Sales Tax Starts Monday to governmental units, semipublic institutions or diplomats.

Only 5500 certificates of registration have been issued for collection of the tax, but retailers were put on notice yesterday by Sales Tax Administrator Allan F. Brooke, that "whether they have certificates or not, they must collect the tax and purchasers must pay the tax."

Legally, retailers without certificates are liable to fines for failure to obtain the papers in time, but this will be waived for a short time to permit processing of applications now on hand. An additional 3500 are now being worked on, Brooke said.

Merchants need the registration certificates in order to fill out resale certificates permitting them to purchase goods from their suppliers without paying the tax.

Brooke announced that dealers applying at room 210 of the District Building on Monday between 8:45 a. m. and 4:45 p. m. will be assigned registration certificate numbers across the counter, thus permitting them to execute the resale certificates.

He also declared that dealers who have not yet received the certificate may note on their resale papers that a certificate has been applied for and the number will be furnished later.

Small Number Disturbing

Brooke was clearly disturbed by the small number of applications thus far filed, but said the "real test will come Monday." The absence of an organized protest against the tax levy, as occurred in Maryland two years ago, is interpreted as indicating a cooperative though dilatory—attitude on the part of local merchants.

This opinion is bolstered by William H. Press, executive secretary, District Board of Trade. He said the "merchants don't look forward to the tax with much pleasure, but they don't really mind it."

He said the tax "will probably push a few people to Virginia, but after 30 days or so, no one will pay any attention to the tax." On the other hand, "the city will get considerable help from its daylight citizens—people living in adjacent areas and from tourists in meeting expenses of Government."

The executive secretary of the Washington Restaurant Association, Robert J. Wilson, seconded this view. "The attitude of the restaurant operators is exceptionally good. They feel it is a necessary duty which they will faithfully perform," he declared.

No Stockpiling Rush

Retailers interviewed yesterday on whether they have experienced a pre-sales tax rush replied that Washingtonians were either good citizens who were not interested in beating the tax or were oblivious to the fact that the tax would go into effect Monday.

A check of downtown liquor stores, tobacco counters, electrical appliance outlets, fur shops and others brought a general opinion that yesterday's business was a normal summer Saturday afternoon.

One liquor dealer declared, "Even if somebody wanted to save the tax by stocking up, he wouldn't come out in this heat."

A radio store owner said, "The $8 tax on a $400 television set won't make the difference if a person is not ready to buy. They'll buy when they're ready."

Pvt. Dan A. Hoadley, the policeman on traffic duty at 14th and F sts nw., said pedestrian and car traffic was the same as usual. As he looked down the hot streets, he noted, "It's like a ghost town."

Martha Scapulo, 29, of Alexandria, treated at Arlington Hospital and released.

Edward Wissman, 50, of 729 5th st. nw., taken to Freedmen's Hospital from a garage at 85 Hanover st. nw., unconscious and in serious condition.

Rachel Williams, 38, 636 Callan st. ne., admitted to Casualty Hospital.

Lucian Smith, 38, no address recorded, treated at Emergency Hospital and released.

John Hayes, 20, 1018 14th st. nw., treated at Emergency Hospital and released.

Mrs. Sadie R. Otto, 61, 219 T st. ne., Department of Commerce employe, found unconscious in her apartment, treated at Emergency Hospital for heat exhaustion and a foot injury believed suffered when she fell.

Weather forecasters here said yesterday that although Sunday will be a comfortable day in comparison with those just past, the relief is to be brief. By Tuesday, they said, the temperature will be "going up a few degrees a day."

The Naval Air Reserve's "operation high school" was completed yesterday as 102 Washington area youths returned from a five-day cruise on the U. S. S. Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Navy's largest carrier.

The trip, part of an eight-week indoctrination course for high school boys interested in joining the Naval Air Reserve, seemed to leave most of the youths amazed and impressed at the sheer size of the carrier and the intricacy of its operation.

The boys watched landing and take-off operations of Air Group 65E from Anacostia, commanded by Comdr. Howard Paine of Washington, whose pilots were on a "refresher" mission, flying from Oceana, Va., to the carrier about 150 miles off the coast.

They participated in a "general quarters" to defend the ship against a mock atom attack, watched gunnery practice and dive bomber attacks, and generally had a wonderful time despite the fact that, the Navy being the Navy, they had a few "swab-down" details to do.

"I think I'll join the Regular Navy," said 18-year-old Gordon Evans of 1627 B st. ne., an Eastern High School senior. "I'd like to become an electrician's mate and be stationed on that carrier."

"It's a hell of a big ship," said Edmund Orleans, 18, of 7700 Eastern ave., who goes to Coolidge High School. "Everything was fine—chow was good, and plentiful, they had a nice ship's store—but it was hot down below, and a lot of the boys slept on deck."

Michael Combs, 19, of 335 14th st. ne., a McKinley Technical High senior, said the carrier seemed like a "floating hotel" to him, compared to a merchant ship he had worked on last summer. He wants to be a boatswain's mate.

Not only the carrier's size, but the teamwork shown in the flying operations impressed 18-year-old James Carrico of 5422 56th ave., East Riverdale, Md., who goes to Hyattsville High. The teamwork he referred to resulted in 90 landings and take-offs in 90 minutes by the Anacostia pilots. Commander Paine said later.

Marine Fighters Back After Maneuvers

Back home after taking part in two weeks of intensive combat maneuvers at Cherry Point, N. C., members of Washington's Marine Fighter Squadron 321, were praised by their officers yesterday.

During the maneuvers, largest in the three postwar years of the Marine Air Reserve Training Command, the reservists showed they were powerful forces in the air defense of the country, according to Lieut. Col. C. T. Mattison, commanding officer of the Marine detachment.

The 321st was part of 2600 officers and enlisted men from bases east of the Mississippi River who "covered" infantry attacking an "enemy" force 25 miles east of Cherry Point. So "deadly" was the "bombing" by the 321st and other units that the opposition collapsed on the second day.

Agency Heads Stricken From Pay Hike Measure Included in Long's Bill

The heads of a score of agencies have been stricken from the executive pay raise bill and a number of other changes have been made in the measure by the Senate Civil Service Committee.

However, the agency heads would be given $15,000 salaries in the Long bill to revise the classification act. They direct these agencies:

Rural Electrification Administration, Customs Bureau, Reclamation Bureau, Soil Conservation Service, Farm Credit Administration, Social Security Administration, Forest Service, Farmers Home Administration, Civil Aeronautics Administration, Narcotics Bureau, Federal Crop Insurance, National Archives, Production and Marketing Administration, Internal Revenue Bureau, Public Roads Administration, Public Buildings Administration, Office of Community Facilities, Immigration and Naturalization Service. Also affected similarly are the three special assistants to the Defense Secretary.

The committee voted to exclude all officials from the executive pay bill who could be given pay boosts in the classified measure. It plans to call up the bills for debate at the same time in the Senate.

These were among other changes made in the House-approved executive pay bill: The ECA Administrator was raised from $20,000 to $25,000; the Housing and Home Finance Administrator from $18,000 to $20,000; the Reconstruction Finance Corporation chairman from $16,000 to $18,000; $16,000 salaries, instead of $15,000, were fixed for the administrators of Public Housing, Federal Housing, and members of the Home Loan Bank Board, and salaries of the Administrator of U. S. Courts and his chief assistant were set at $16,000 and $12,500, respectively.

The committee plans to make a favorable report to the Senate Tuesday on the executive and classified bill. The classified measure would raise the pay of the average employe by $125 a year, and it would boost the salary ceiling from $10,330 to $15,000. Several hundred $10,330 officials would be raised to $12,000, $13,000, $14,000 or $15,000.

ECONOMY: The Senate is showing signs of getting tough on its economy demands.

It ordered big reductions in both dollars and personnel for the Civil Service Commission and the Public Buildings Administration. However, there is a slight chance that the Senate will reverse itself. A move will be made to reconsider its budget-cutting action before it completes the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill.

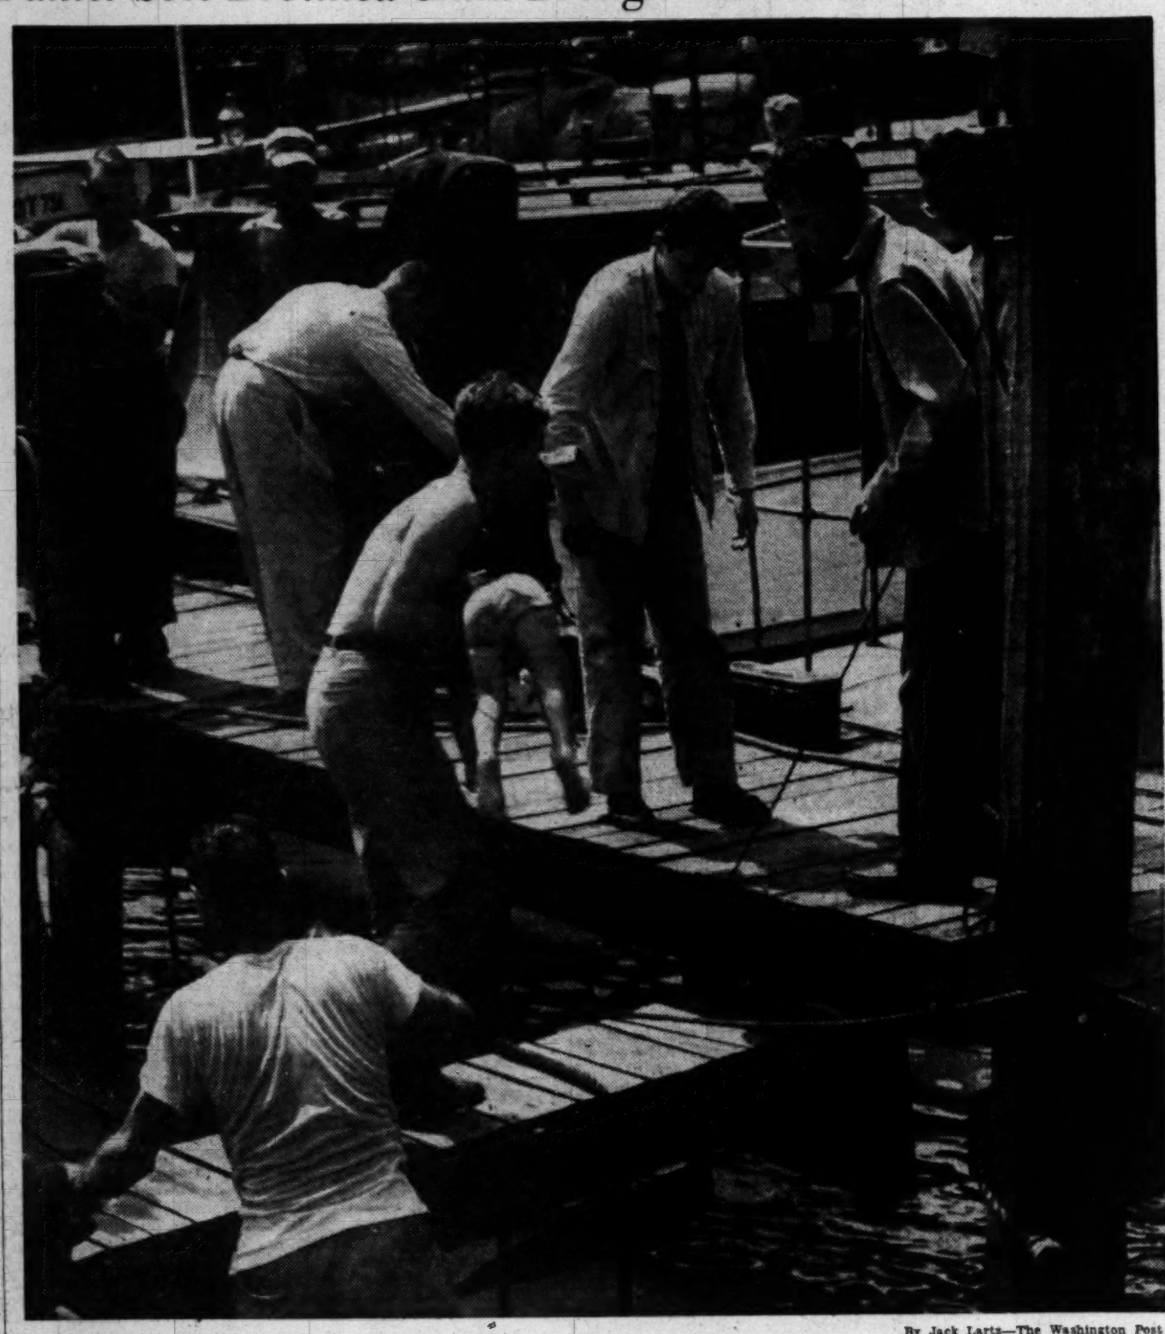
If the Senate insists on the cut, Civil Service will have to lay off 400 additional persons, mainly in its examining division. PBA will have to fire upwards of 1000 additional persons, about 600 here.

The Senate also voted a 10 per cent reduction in the budget for the Office of the Housing Expediter, funds for 550 employes. No substantial layoffs will have to be made, since the agency has a number of vacancies on its staff.

A $300,000 cut for the Interstate Commerce Commission was rejected by a 45-to-40 vote. The Senate also refused to make a 10 per cent cut in the 43-million-dollar budget of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. NACA will use the new money to hire several thousand additional employes to do research on aircraft.

The Senate was arguing over a proposed 5 per cent reduction for the Maritime Commission when it adjourned until Monday. It approved its Appropriations Committee's budget recommendation for National Archives, Security and Exchange Commission, Selective Service, Smithsonian Institution, Tariff Commission, Tennessee Valley Authority, and the U. S. Tax Court.

Father Sees Drowned Child Brought Ashore . . .



By Jack Lartz—The Washington Post

SUMMER TRAGEDY—William Cope, next to pole at right, looks on in grief as a member of No. 1 Fire Rescue Squad brings the body of his 2½-year-old daughter, Marilyn Lee, to the dock at the Buzzard Point boathouse. The little girl, reaching for water, fell overboard from the 50-foot cabin cruiser on which the family lives. (See story on Page 3)

By Jean Reiff
Post Reporter

A 2½-year-old girl drowned in the Anacostia River yesterday when she fell from her parents' boat.

The child, Marilyn Lee Cope, alone on the boat, was trying to get a drink of water from a hose, used to fill the boat's water tanks, when she leaned too far over the edge and toppled overboard.

She fell almost within reach of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Cope, who were swimming with several other persons around the bow of the boat. The Copes live on the 50-fot craft, The Viking, moored off the Buzzard Point Boat Yard, at First and V sts. sw.

Last November the little girl fell from the boat in a similar accident, but was rescued from drowning, police said.

Several of the swimmers tried to seize the child as she hit the muddy water and disappeared, but they missed her. Their shouts brought a dozen men from other boats, who started diving, someone ran to telephone for a rescue squad.

It was almost high tide and the water was about 15 feet deep when the child fell in at 1:30 p. m. Members of Rescue Squad One and harbor police were on the scene quickly. They moved the Copes' boat out into the middle of the river and started dragging where it had been moored.

Finally the Navy sent several men from its diving school. Two were lowered to the bottom of the river. After a few minutes, Raymond Resch, chief instructor in the school, found the little girl's body almost at the spot where she had disappeared.

It was 3 p. m., when Marilyn was brought to the surface, clad only in white panties, with a white beret still clinging to her water-soaked brown curls. Artifical respiration failed to revive the child, and she was pronounced dead at 3:15 p. m. by Dr. W. D. Claudy of 1746 K st. nw., who had been called to attend the parents.

The mother and father, and a 14-year-old aunt of the child, visiting from Narth Carolina, watched from a neighbor's boat as the dragging went on.

When the child's body was recovered, the mother screamed: "Let me get to her, I want to see her," while several persons prevented her from jumping into the water.

The father watched silently as attempts were made to revive the child. Then he asked, "Is there any hope?" and collapsed quietly on the dock after the doctor gave a negative reply.

Coroner A. Magruder Macdonald issued a certificate of accidental death due to drowning late yesterday afternoon.

Neighbors said the Copes' have one other child, a 6-month-old girl.

Father of 3 Drowns In Kingman Lake

The body of Burt Akins, 41, 4113 Gault pl. ne., was found by police last night in Kingman Lake.

His wife, Mrs. Lois Akins, who lives with their three children at 528 46th st. se., identified the body.

Mrs. Akins told police that her husband had a fishing date with his son, Burt, jr., 11, at Kingman Lake yesterday, but failed to appear, though the boy waited several hours.

She told officers the father may have fallen into the lake while asleep waiting for the boy. There are two other children, Mary, 13, and Rosa Lee, 7. Akins also is survived by his mother, Mrs. Grace Harris, 2321 L st. nw.

Dunn Heads Legion in Washington

Insurance Man Wins Over Kuldell By 254 to 174; Served in 2 Wars

Charles K. Dunn, Washington insurance man and veteran of both World Wars, last night was elected commander of the District Department of the American Legion.

The election, climaxing the thirty-first annual Legion convention at the Shoreham Hotel, saw Dunn defeat Carl F. Kuldell, Navy Department employe, by a vote of 254 to 174.

Dunn, 54, is married and lives with his wife at 1827 Summit pl. nw. He is a past commander of the Sergeant Jasper Post No. 13.

During World War II, the new commander saw five years of Army service, including two with the Transportation Corps in the China-India-Burma theater. He was stationed at Kunming, China, and Calcutta, India. He emerged with rank of major.

During World War I he was a lieutenant in the Chemical Warfare Branch, seeing 23 months of service, including 16 months in the AEF.

Born in Lexington, Ky., Dunn went to elementary school in that town, and in 1916 was graduated from the University of Kentucky with a degree in electrical engineering.

Following World War I, he was for 10 years associated with Bell Telephone Co. in Chicago.

Dunn came to Washington in 1930. He is a chartered life underwriter with the New England Mutual Life Insurance Co.

During the past year Dunn served as chairman of the ways and means committee of the Legion Department here.

"The aim of our administration," the new commander said, "will be to promote the objectives of the American Legion as mandated by the national and department conventions."

Accent on Housing

Locally, he said, his administration would pay particular attention to securing housing for veterans.

Swept in with Dunn were five vice commanders running as candidates on his slate:

George J. Burkett, 3418 Minnesota ave, se., of the Washington Building and Construction Trades Post 54.

William R. Clay, 4526 Livingston rd. se., of Second Division Post 28.

Byron E. Dunn, 5329 42d st. nw., of the National Cathedral Post 10.

James B. Lomack, 418 U st. nw., of the James E. Walker Post 26.

Jacob Milwit, 917 18th st. nw., of the General Accounting Office Post 48.

All but Clay, who is an adjutant, are commanders of their posts. All but Lomack are World War II veterans.

Some 1000 delegates and other Legionnaires were on hand for the election in the colorfully bedecked main ballroom. The election concluded the organization's three-day convention.

Estate Is $1210

Turnage's Gifts Left Him Poor

Needham C. Turnage, who was United States Commissioner here for 27 years, left an estate of $1210, is was learned yesterday.

Mrs. Mabel Godwin Turnage, his widow, who lives at 1222 Decatur st. nw., said the amount was so small because her husband gave much of his earnings to the needy.

She said she is not sorry, but is proud and unafraid of the future.

"Our house is clear and even if I went hungry, no one would learn of it. I come from good stock," she said.

Mr. Turnage died June 18 at the Veterans Administration Hospital at Oteen, N. C., where he was being treated for a lung disease. He was 61. His widow is a year younger.

"My husband's philanthropies were innumerable and never received any public notice or fanfare. He never forgot that he was an orphan from the age of 13 and whenever he had a chance he gave his fellow man a financial or a human lift," she said.

The Turnages had no children. But the commissioner, an official of the Masonic order here, worked hard arranging affairs for needy children. He often said he was prouder of these endeavors than any others in his career.

She said his prime worry while he was ill was for her welfare.

Silver Spring Man Killed, 3 Hurt in Auto Crash

Donald Schulze Is Victim When Auto Skids; Two Area Women Injured

One man was killed and three other persons were injured early yesterday when the car in which they were riding in rural Montgomery County skidded on loose gravel and overturned.

Schulze

Police said the mishap occurred on the Glenmont-Layhill road, a short distance south of Layhill, at 3:16 a. m.

Killed was Donald N. Schulze, 22, 9602 Sligo Creek pkwy., Silver Spring. He was a passenger.

The driver, according to police, was Charles E. Brewer, 22, Forest Glen, Md. He is in critical condition at Suburban Hospital, Bethesda, with head and internal injuries.

Also admitted to the hospital and treated for cuts, bruises and shock were Alicia Bennett, 23, 2026 Gosnell st., Silver Spring, and Elton Johnson, 29, 9760 Omaha Beach dr., Silver Spring.

Schulze, relatives said, had been employed by his grandfather, T. L. Lechlider, a contractor, 414 Silver Spring ave., Silver Spring, but was to have gone to work shortly as a driver for Capital Transit Co. He is a veteran of 25 months of Navy service.

Surviving him are his widow, a 15-months-old son, Philip; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Schulze, and three brothers, Volney, Roger and Wayne Schulze, of 412 Silver Spring ave., Silver Spring.

Two Washington area women were injured near Mayo, Md., when their car apparently went out of control and struck a tree, according to Anne Arundel County Police. They were Mary Fedele, 27, of Maine Hall, Arlington Farms, who suffered a severe head cut, and Ruth W. Baldwin, 27, the driver, 4303 53d ave., Bladensburg, Md., who suffered cuts, bruises and shock. They were treated at Emergency Hospital, Annapolis.

Also in Anne Arundel County, near Lothian, Harry L. Ryan, jr., 38, 404 Upland pl., Alexandria, was injured when his car turned over after apparently failing to make a turn. He was taken to Casualty Hospital in Washington, suffering from head injuries.

Alfred Dunaway, 39, 6534 Rhode Island ave., Mount Rainier, Md., and Eugene Jackson, 44, 3139 Queens Chapel rd., Mount Rainier, were brought to Casualty Hospital last night as result of an accident on Maryland Route 5, near Camp Springs. Dunaway was suffering possible internal injuries and head injuries. Jackson, hospital attaches said, may have fractures of both legs, and internal injuries.

Details of the accident were not immediately available.

Ex-Convict Arrested On Holdup Charge

A 33-year-old former convict who has been living here aboard a yacht was held yesterday in $5000 bond on a charge of fleeing from New Jersey to escape prosecution for two payroll holdups totalling $9200.

He is John C. Krafa, who for the past three months has been on the Tech, anchored off Maine ave. sw. Krafa denied complicity in the holdups.

United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence continued the case until August 11 to allow New Jersey State officials to send necessary documents here.

FBI agents said that they received word that Krafa was armed and dangerous. They arrested him at the boat where he was sleeping early yesterday and found no firearms.

Krafa related that he escaped a decade ago from a road gang in Georgia where he was serving time for a forgery but was later apprehended and served 15 months.

While in New Jersey this year, he said he was arrested together with 30 or 40 others in connection with two holdups but was questioned and released.

25 Arrested In Local Dice Game Raid

Lieut. Roy Blick, head of the police vice squad, and six of his men raided what they said was a large crap game early yesterday and arrested 25 persons.

The raid was on the first floor rear of 603 P st. nw. The officers entered with a search warrant obtained on evidence supplied by an undercover man. Lieutenant Blick said the man lost $6 in 20 minutes of play. The "house," he said, collected 5 cents on each dollar bet.

Charged with setting up a gaming table were Laura M. Waters, 54, of the P st. address; Grover L. James, 34, of 1125 6th st. nw., and Julius Jackson, 28, 1422 Rhode Island ave. nw. All waived preliminary hearing before United States Commissioner C. S. Lawrence and were released for action of the grand jury under $1000 bond each. The 22 others arrested were charged with disorderly conduct and elected to forfeit $5 bail each.

Chevy Chase Man Found Hanged Ruled Suicide

Louis Sutliffe Murphy, jr., 26-year-old Navy veteran who was found hanged Friday night in the basement of his home at 103 E. Bradley la., Chevy Chase, has been ruled a suicide.

Montgomery County Medical Examiner Frank J. Broschart issued the certificate after police found Murphy's nude body hanging from a girder, a tumbled chair laying nearby.

Dr. Broschart was unable to supply a motive. He said the body had been hanging for about eight hours. Lieut. W. P. Watkins, of the Montgomery County police, said Murphy had been alone all day, his mother, Mrs. Louis S. Murphy, having left on vacation.

Police were called by Murphy's cousin who had reason to believe Murphy was home but couldn't get him on the phone. Murphy's father died two years ago.

Senate Unit Plans Single Pay Hike Bill

A Senate subcommittee is preparing to recommend a one-package bill to hike top executive salaries and provide a general reclassification of other Federal positions.

This plan was disclosed Friday after a subcommittee meeting by Chairman Russell Long (D., La.) who emphasized that it was still tentative and would remain so until a further meeting set for Monday.

The executive pay bill, cleared earlier by the House, boosts Cabinet members from $15,000 to $25,000, and hikes the salaries of some 240 other top level positions.

The classification bill would result in an average $125 annual increase for thousands of government employes.

Long said a major factor in the subcommittee's thought of combining the two was the prospect of a $5000 gap between the lowest salaries proposed in the executive pay bill, and the top classified salaries that would remain without action on the reclassification bill.

He said the reclassification bill would erase the gap, by boosting from $10,330 to $15,000 the classified salary ceiling.

Long said the subcommittee also decided tentatively to fix a $25,000 salary for the ECA Administrator Paul G. Hoffman, to place the job on a par with the Cabinet members.

Long indicated doubt that the subcommittee would restore to the bill an increase in the District Commissioners' salaries from $10,330 to $15,000. This increase was proposed by the House Civil Service Committee, but the House struck it out.

Pennsy Brakeman Found Hanged By Wife in Basement

A 46-year-old parttime brakeman for the Pennsylvania Railroad was found hanging by his neck behind a basement door at his home at 310 Atlantic st. se. last night.

Police identified him as Ernest Carlton Shelton. Police said he was discovered by his wife, Mrs. Susie E. Shelton, at 7:25 p. m., cut down by his son-in-law, Leon Robinson, and pronounced dead at Gallinger Hospital a half hour later.

Shelton had been in ill health for some time and had undergone a serious operation last year, police said.

He was born and raised in Washington. His wife is employed in the art department at Kann's department store. Three daughters survive.

Man Dies After Choking Spell

T. Russell Heather, 40, 2025 I st. nw., employe of the Social Security Board, died early yesterday following a choking spell he suffered while in the Crescent Cafe, 1338 New York ave. nw.

Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, issued a certificate of death by accidental asphyxiation, after an autopsy.

Senate Group Urges Study Of Tax Exempt Institutions

The Senate District Committee believes a study should be made of tax exempt institutions in Washington.

In sending to the Senate a bill to exempt from District property taxes the Washington building of the Society of Colonial Dames of America, the committee declared in a report:

"It was the view of the committee that the entire matter of exemption of educational, charitable and religious organizations located in the District should be made the subject of a comprehensive study, with a view to developing a new congressional policy with regard to exempting such organizations.

"Apparently there are some institutions now in the District which appear to enjoy the exemption and do not appear to meet the requirements of the local law."

The report cited exempt private institutions whose taxes would amount to a total of about $344,000 annually if there were no property tax exemption for them.

The list, however, did not include educational, charitable and religious organizations covered by the general exemption law of 1942. Some of the institutions exempted by name in that act were listed, as well as others for whom Congress has enacted special exemption acts.

The 1942 law extended the exemption policy far beyond that which the District government had urged. The District had sought to tighten the exemption list.

The following exempt organizations were listed in a District official's report to the committee:

(The first figure beside each name is the assessed property value, and the second figure the amount of the tax that would be collected if the organization were not exempt.)

Organizations comparable to the Colonial Dames:
Society of the Cincinnati	$496,972	$57,549.62

Boys' Forum Sponsored By Legion

Unlike Congress, which doesn't work weekends, the 86 boys attending the American Legion-sponsored Boys Forum of National Government will keep right on hammering away at current issues in a night session today.

Meeting at American University's Hurst Hall, the boys will split up into committees and take on such problems as farm support, Federal aid to education, Atlantic Pact implementation, and control of communism.

A number of Congresmen who are especially interested in those issues are expected to drop by and help out. Among them are Senator George O. Aiken (R., Vt.), Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.), Representative Brooks Hays (D., Ark.), and Representative John R. Murdock (D., Ariz.).

Earlier today the boys are scheduled to attend church, lay a wreath at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, visit Mount Vernon, and listen to an Army Band concert at their American University headquarters.

Yesterday, the boys, all of whom are either high school seniors or juniors and average 17 years of age, quizzed Representative Hugo Sims (D., S. C.) on Federal aid to education. They also called on House Speaker Sam Rayburn in his Capitol office. Later four of the boys discussed current events with commentator Bill Shadel on WTOP.

Last night, the forum divided into Federalist and Nationalist parties and nominated convention officers. Before the forum ends August 4, the parties will hold their conventions and a boy president will be elected.

The boys were picked for the Forum in the Legion's Boys State programs in the 48 States. They are all outstanding students and citizens in their respective communities. Before they're through, they will meet with the President, the Vice President, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of Defense.

Local Navy Man Wins Praise for Rescuing Girl, 10

Boatswain's Mate, third class, Charles E. Jackson, 30, of 613 Girard st. ne., received an official "well done" from his skipper for pulling a 10-year-old girl out of a North River, N. Y., current July 3.

Jackson

The child, officials announced yesterday, was a visitor aboard Jackson's ship, the USS Mount Olympus, which was stationed in New York City. She lost her footing, fell in the river and was swept underneath by the current. Jackson dove for her and pulled her to safety.

The Mount Olympus, a communications ship, is currently based at Norfolk. Jackson, who has been in the Navy six years, is the father of four children. His wife is Mrs. Lauretta Jackson.

Iceman to Face Jury for Racing Horse in Heat

A 56-year-old iceman was charged yesterday with cruelty to a horse which police said he raced in the heat Friday on 3d st. sw.

He is Harry Austin, 56, of 608 3d st. sw. The case was continued by Judge Armond W. Scott of Municipal Court for jury trial on September 23.

According to Police Pvt. Milton E. Washington, a witness reported seeing Austin racing his wagon with another wagon at 11:30 a. m. Friday. When stopped, Austin's horse, a bay, was found to have a large harness sore, Washington said.

Area News in Brief

Fire Damages U.S. Bowie Installation

Fire damaged three buildings of the Forest Service Branch of the Department of Agriculture Research Center near Bowie, Md. to the extent of $40,000 early yesterday morning.

Two buildings were two-story frame warehouses and the third, also two stories, was occupied by Harold Ford, an employe, his wife, and two children. The structures were connected.

A member of the Bowie Volunteer Fire Department, John Robey 19, was overcome by smoke and treated by the Branchville Rescue Squad. Four nearby homes were endangered by flying sparks, but were undamaged. Firemen laid 1200 feet of hose from a pond after the center's water system proved inadequate.

Companies fighting the blaze included Glenn Dale, West Lanham Hills, Landover Hills, Laurel, Riverdale Heights, Bowie and Branchville.

1100 Attend Clinics

More than 600 white children and 500 Negro children of preschool age attended the free fluorine treatment clinics here during July, Dr. A. Harry Ostrow, director of the District Bureau of Dental Service, said yesterday.

He said only a few more appointments can be granted to Negro children before the program ends September 1. The Negro clinic is at Grimke School, Vermont ave. and T sts. nw. No new patients can be accommodated at the clinic for white children, he said.

Safe Thieves Back Down

Marauders who broke through a barred rear window at the Home Appliance Co., 1021 H st. ne., got only sweat for their effort, police reported yesterday.

They moved a heavy safe into the alley, and punched a hole through the back of it. Then, according to police, they apparently were frightened away.

There was $1800 within easy reach through the hole the burglars had made.

'Toonerville Trolley' Makes Final Run From Beltsville

The last streetcar on the Capital Transit Co.'s "Toonerville Trolley" line between Branchville and Beltsville, Md , left Beltsville at 1:35 this morning on its final trip to the car barn.

The farewell trip marked the culmination of the transit company's fight of nearly two years to abandon service on the 3.2-mile shuttle line it operated for 47 years.

Early last month the Maryland Court of Appeals approved the company's petition to end service, reversing a negative ruling by the State Public Service Commission.

CTC contended annual losses on the line were almost $35,000. Passenger traffic averaged only about 300 a day, it said.

Commuters Stranded

Veteran Motorman Lewis M. Anderson, 3630 21st st., Arlington, spent most of his time yesterday bidding farewell to his passengers.

On one of Anderson's last trips, eight persons boarded the trolley in front of Al Johnson's store in Branchville for the outgoing trip. Five alighted at midway points and three rode through to Beltsville, where the tracks end abruptly in a sand bank.

For these riders, beginning today, there is no transportation except the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad or interstate bus lines along the Baltimore pike. And at some points the single-track trolley line is quite a distance from either.

Commuters, for the most part, however, took the termination of service philosophically.

"After all," two women agreed, "we can't expect the company to keep on operating for just a handful of people—even if we are left high and dry."

The outgoing trip took 12 minutes from the "turnaround" for streamlined cars from Washington to the little line's ignominious ending in the sandbank.

Where the line crosses the Baltimore-Washington pike, however, the little car proceeded in its most complete majesty.

On either side of the pike was a control box where the motorman turned a switch to change traffic lights on the highway from green to red, stopping traffic while the trolley crossed in leisurely dignity.

Switch Turned Back

Once across, the motorman again turned a switch and the impatiently halted traffic roared off once again.

Asked if any motorman ever had forgotten to turn the light back to green, leaving the traffic at a standstill, Anderson could not recall such an incident.

"But if I ever did," he said, "There would have been a State trooper waiting for me with blood in his eye when I came back."

Odds on Battle Cut as Race Enters Stretch in Virginia

come of a possible two-way race between Battle and Miller.

That he is a magnetic attraction to would-be supporters of Battle, the "organization" candidate, has been unquestioned. Today, he is seen as a not-too-dark horse hitting his stride as a real contender.

Miller, who vows he will destroy the "Byrd machine," continues to wage an aggressive two-way fight with Battle. Charges and countercharges have been cast about freely in the last 24 hours. But Edwards claims these two are more afraid of him than of each other.

Over 3000 at Rally

The apparent rise in sentiment here for Edwards may be due to a successful rally held at the fair grounds Thursday and therefore may be merely local in scope. More than 3000 persons at the rally whooped it up for the 46-year-old candidate who proposes a 2 per cent sales tax for school needs—an unusually large turnout.

Edwards is the only candidate who expects the total vote to exceed 300,000 by any appreciable figure.

His campaign manager, Ed P. Phillips, predicted it will be between 325,000 and 350,000. Edwards, he feels, will run "at the top" by an unspecified plurality.

Phillips says Edwards will carry the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Sixth and Ninth Congressional Districts. He also is optimistic about the Seventh and Eighth, but said the Fifth—in southside Virginia — would probably go to Battle.

The Miller-Battle foray was highlighted today by a retort from Miller on Battle's disclosure of a union leader's affidavit linking Miller with "outside" labor interests.

Calls It 'Tissue of Lies'

Miller called it all "a tissue of lies."

Battle had said an affidavit, signed by Frank Nesbit, president of the Front Royal Local of the Textile Workers Union (CIO), was "conclusive proof" that Miller is supported by unions directed by leaders "foreign" to Virginia.

The affidavit said Miller told a CIO session in Richmond he welcomed their support, but asked them "to keep it as quiet as possible."

Miller today said Battle attended the same meeting, and that the affidavit was " a tissue of lies from beginning to end."

The affidavit was part of Battles' campaign strategy developed when he was indorsed by Senator Harry F. Byrd in Harrisonburg four weeks ago, a strategy in which he has insisted that Miller's campaign is supported by "outside labor interests," threatening the Old Dominion with what Byrd has called "an unholy invasion."

In harping on this theme, Battle has directed most of his attention to Miller alone.

Narrow Margin Given

The vigor with which the "organization" has conducted the Battle campaign in recent weeks has made him accepted in many quarters as the leading candidate, but by a narrow margin.

His campaign director, Sidney S. Kellam, however, says Battle has it in the bag.

"There is no doubt in my mind but that Senator Battle will carry every congressional district," Kellam declared, basing his prediction on what he called "the straightforward and fearless manner in which Battle has conducted his campaign."

Kellam would not venture an estimate of the total number of votes Battle will get, but another spokesman said a week ago that it would be "about 100,000."

Louis Spilman, manager for Miller, also was confident of victory, but not quite so optimistic about this candidate's ability to sweep the State.

309,000 Total Estimated

He estimated the total vote would be about 309,000, or 35 per cent greater than that cast in the Byrd-Hutchinson primary for the Senate in 1946. He gave Miller 107,515, Battle 97,200, Edwards 69,725 and Arnold 34,500.

Spilman's view of the congressional district race resembles that of Edwards' manager. Spilman says Miller will carry the Second, Third, Fifth, Sixth and Ninth. The First seems "very, very close" between Battle, Edwards and Miller, he said, and the Fourth may go to any of the four candidates.

He conceded the Seventh (Shenandoah Valley) and Eighth (which borders on Washington) to Battle.

Miller, in a talk at Matthews Court House today, repeated his campaign promise to overhaul the State government if he is elected. He hinted he would fire Charles M. Lankford, jr., Commissioner of Virginia Fisheries. He has already said L. M. Walker, jr., Commissioner of Agriculture, would be ousted.

As to Arnold, he has scoffed at the generally accepted belief that he will finish a poor fourth in the primary. His breakdown of the outcome gives him 102,250 out of a total of 325,000 votes. His headquarters, however, could not be reached today for a geographical estimate of strength.

Arnold's bid for the nomination reached its climax about three weeks ago, when he charged the "Byrd machine" with offering him a political trade to withdraw from the race.

Promises Alleged

Arnold claimed Battle supporters had promised him "the lieutenant governorship on a silver platter" and had even suggested he wait until 1952, when he would be supported for Byrd's seat in the United States Senate.

What he described as his "major campaign speech" is scheduled to be delivered over a State-wide radio hookup at 9 p. m. (EST) today.

All candidates are expected to speak on the radio at least once on Monday, after which they will return to their homes to await returns. On primary day, Edwards will probably be in Richmond; Arnold in Petersburg; Miller in Albemarle County, and Battle in Charlottesville.

There is promise of further fireworks on Tuesday, however, with the Republicans holding their first primary and with many of them expected to try to vote in the Democratic primary.

Walter Johnson of Heathville, in Northumberland County, is their unopposed candidate for the gubernatorial nomination. Yesterday he said the Democratic contest is between Miller and Battle.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., who is a candidate for reelection, has said party affiliation for voting in the primaries will be determined by how a voter cast his ballot in the last preceding congressional election.

Prior to this ruling, Henry A. Wise, former Republican national committeeman from Virginia, asked the GOP to rally around Senator Battle in the Democratic primary. He was rebuked by several Republican leaders in the State, but Battle called his plea "highly patriotic" though "unsolicited."

Edwards in Arlington Questions Battle Again

Horace H. Edwards charged in an address in Arlington last night that John S. Battle, one of his opponents for the Democratic governorship nomination in Virginia, is proposing a program 44 million dollars more expensive than the State can pay for now.

He charged at the rally in Washington-Lee High School that Battle, who has the backing of the Byrd political "machine," is guilty of the "folly of promising to give away millions and millions of dollars that do not exist."

Edwards was introduced by Kenneth Dixon, an Arlington teacher, before an audience of about 60 persons. He arrived at National Airport only a short time before the speech.

In his address, the candidate renewed his demand that Battle answer before Tuesday's primary seven questions Edwards propounded on the Virginia financial situation.

Among these were whether local communities would have to raise taxes to repay State loans Battle proposes to make to them; where money is coming from for increasing teacher salaries and school services; why, if economies will provide the funds, hasn't Battle made the economies as chairman of the State Senate Finance Committee; what will become of Battle's financial program if a business recession occurs; will Battle, if elected, fight or veto a sales tax to raise school funds, and will he make a flat promise of no tax increases.

He said that, in the past 10 days, he found sentiment of those "looking for a new and better Virginia and a broader and more understanding government" is swinging toward him in the campaign.

Virginia Employes Get Time Off to Vote

Richmond, Va., July 30 (AP).State employes will get time off Tuesday to vote in the State's first dual primary.

In a memorandum to all department heads, Governor Tuck yesterday authorized necessary time off for voting after 3 p. m.

The Governor said he could not recollect such action before. The only agency of the State government that will not function THuesday will be the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board's stores, which are required by law to remain closed on election days.

In Memoriam

ISLER, WILLIAM F. In loving memory of my dear husband, WILLIAM F. ISLER, who departed this life two years ago, July 30, 1947.
Forget you, no, I never will.
I loved you then, I love you still.
Your memory is as fresh today
As in the hour you passed away.
Your loving wife,
WAVERLY ISLER.

Half of Italy's Police in 'War' Against the Mafia

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

PALERMO, Sicily.—Sicily, home of the Mafia, is a flinty, arid arrowhead of an island seared by a sun more African than Italian. Here the rich are few and the poor are legion and the soil is as weak as the wine is strong.

It is a land of booted barons and pauper peasants, peopled principally by long-haired goats and sweet-faced donkeys, but also by skinny, underfed children, solemn women in black, and dark, dour men in caps and shirtsleeves who seem to shave only on Sundays.

FRANK GERVASI

Sicily has produced its statesmen. Francesco Crispi ranks among Italy's greats. It has given the world immortal painters, among them Antoniello da Messina. It gave to Hollywood one of its most talented directors, Frank Capra.

And the island has contributed to the well-being of other lands with its sulphur and wine, oranges and lemons, olives and cork. But Sicily is famed mostly for another export—gangsters. This, decent Sicilians deplore. But, as we shall see, there is no help for it. This island has upon it the curse of corruption and poverty and only draconian measures will lift it.

At present there is being played out in Sicily's setting of barren mountains, scabrous villages, remote ravines and idyllic valleys a drama as native as the cacti and the palms of its quasi-tropical climate. Perhaps in the telling of it I may convey, too, the story of this tragic island, colonized by the ancient Greeks, conquered successively by Romans, Saracens, Normans and Spaniards, each of whom have left traces and monuments of their cultures, but each of whom, also, deposited in the polyglot Sicilian bloodstream their vices and corruptions.

Over a Sack of Grain

THE CENTRAL character in this new and more sordid Cavalleria Rusticana is a reputedly handsome, wavy-haired young man of 27 named Salvatore Giuliano. He is, however, no Turiddu of the Mascagni opera. He is, instead, a ruthless killer credited, in five years of banditry, with the murder of 74 pursuing police and 84 civilians.

Giuliano has been hunted by the carabinieri since that day late in October, 1943, when he shot and killed an officer who tried to confiscate a sack of grain—the gold of the burgeoning black market of those chaotic times—which the outlaw-to-be was carrying from his native Montelepre along the dusty, rocky road to Palermo, 10 miles distant.

One night in 1945, perhaps because news was dull in Rome's Via Della Mercede, an American agency cabled the story of an exploit allegedly perpetrated by Giuliano. A bandit robbed a rich victim of money subsequently distributed to the poor. Rapidly the headlines crocheted about Giuliano a Robin Hoodish myth.

True, banditry has been rampant in Sicily ever since the war ended. True, too, pillaging and murder have become increasingly common. But who can say that the crimes are all attributable to Giuliano? None has ever seen his face and lived to tell about it.

That he exists, there is no doubt. He was born in Montelepre on November 22, 1922. He was an indolent, timorous child. He earned a living, when he grew to manhood, as an itinerant farm worker and electrician. His mother, his entire family, has been arrested. Some 7800 carabinieri, armed with machine guns, grenades and armored cars, are hunting him. These are facts.

The rest—the portrait of a daring and ruthless bandit, gorgeous as an early Greek and frequently noble as a Norman that emerges from newspaper stories and pulp-paper articles—may be pure romance.

The Mafia Lives On

THE RAIDS and robberies, murders and kidnapings are real enough. But that they are all perpetrated by Giuliano or his band is sheer journalistic conjecture. They are the work of a power greater than Giuliano—the Mafia—and long after Interior Minister Mario Scelba's coppers kill some desperado identifiable as the terror of Montelepre, that organization will continue to operate.

For the Mafia, in the centuries since its birth under the Saracens and its lusty manhood under the Spaniards, is as much a part of the Sicilian scene as the Byzantine columns of its churches and the baroque of the villas of Baghieria.

Of Benito Mussolini's many boasts, the emptiest was the one that he had destroyed the Mafia. He drove it underground but he did not destroy it, not even when his troops shelled into rubble one of the many remote towns which served as headquarters for the mafiosi.

It is the Mafia and not Giuliano which is responsible for the presence in Sicily today of nearly half of Italy's total available police force, and Scelba, himself a Sicilian, knows this. Scelba also knows, or should, that until the government of Rome resolves the conditions which breed the Mafia, Sicily—where tempers are as hot as the brassy sky and loyalties as deep as the surrounding sea—will remain a ravaged land, its highways and trails unsafe for peace-loving people.

What are those conditions? They are identical with those which plague all Italy south of Rome, Spain and wherever Spain planted its flag in the New World—corruption, the son of poverty, which is, in turn, the handmaiden of landlessness.

Sicily today is what it has been for five centuries, a feudal society. "We kiss thy hands, thy lordship," is still the greeting of the massaro, the sharecropper, as he lifts his cap to the barone, the landowner. Of massari and their families there are 4,500,000, far more than the largely unarable land can decently support. The baroni may be counted in the small hundreds.

In Lieu of Law

BETWEEN peasant and baron, down through the centuries, has existed a hatred as deep and as hot as the bowels of Mount Aetna itself. And this antagonism opened the door—probably in the twelfth century, for the word Mafia derives from the Arabic mahias, meaning tough guy—to one of the earliest "protective" organizations in gangster history.

Whenever he could, the poverty-stricken peasant stole from his overlord and fled to the remote ravines of the barren hills and mountains inland, protected by the inaccessibility of his hideout and by the silence of his family and friends.

The Mafia, offering the barons "protection" from such depredation, was a natural consequence. It flourished when banditry reached the status of a major industry in the days of the Spaniards. Sicily, then, was ruled from distant Naples. Neither funds nor men could be spared by the Bourbons to police Sicily properly. The Mafia became the law.

The Mafia punished with the knife, the rifle or the shotgun. It killed the stool-pigeon and rewarded silence. It became, inevitably, the ally of the barons against the peasants and the instrument for the perpetuation of feudalism. If there is a middle class in Sicily today, it is the Mafia.

Sidney Sonnino, student of Sicilian affairs, Italian Foreign Minister in 1914 and 1918, a conservative who cannot possibly be accused of revolutionary ideas, studied the Mafia phenomena in 1876, soon after Sicily's

Julian Wadleigh's Own Story

'My Double Life in the State Dept.'

By Henry Julian Wadleigh

This is the second Sunday installment of Henry Julian Wadleigh's own story of his collaboration with a Soviet spy ring in the mid-1930s. In the first installment, he told how he wavered between various ideologies until the rise of fascism gave him a "fix" from which he could act. His action was to make contact with the Communists through a friend, Jane B., and offer his services. His contact was called Harold. The story continues from that point.

IT WAS not so long after my first meeting with Harold, my Communist Party "contact," that I was transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the State Department as an economist in the Trade Agreements Division. This was in March, 1936, and for Harold it was a great piece of good luck, for it gave him a "source" in a key place in Washington.

The procedure for my passing of state papers to Harold for the use of the Soviet espionage network was arranged with great care, as one would expect. The system was so methodic, so detection-proof, that no document going to the spy ring ever was out of its proper place in the State Department during working hours.

It was pretty simple, at that.

I would go through the papers on my desk, pick out the ones that I judged would be of interest to the espionage apparatus, put them in a leather envelope and walk out of the office. (Anything significant on Germany and Japan would be considered important, but Harold was also interested in some reports on other countries).

Then I would meet Harold on some street corner, hand him the envelope and go home. The next morning I would meet him in the same manner, and he would return the documents to me on my way to work.

Our meeting places were scattered far and wide over the Capital, and they were never anywhere near the State Department.

A Religion to Him

SOME of the times that I brought papers to Harold in the evening we had dinner together at a restaurant, and in this way I came to know him well.

He would sometimes speak of himself with noticeable pride as a "professional revolutionary," but communism was much more than a profession to him; it had the same place in his life that religion has in the life of a saint.

In spite of his intelligence, he had all the narrowness of mind that is characteristic of most Communists. All the facts that he knew were fitted in his mind into a pattern set by Marxist theory. But Harold's mind would faithfully change with changes in the party line. Only outright conservatives were assailed with real vigor. Of liberals he would say: "They're confused," or: "They're well-meaning, but don't really understand what it's all about."

Once I asked him with a grin if he wasn't shocked at my lack of orthodoxy. He replied: "Well, you have sound political instincts." That was no doubt a concession due to my practical collaboration with the party. Besides, as he had told me once with a big laugh, his superiors in the party had ordered him to be "tactful" with me.

For all his devotion to his cause, Harold was ambitious. He had a strong urge to wield power within the party. It caused him considerable mental anguish, as I was soon to learn, when he was ordered to introduce me to another contact. One day he told me that I was to go with him to Philadelphia to meet this new contact.

Broken Tooth Stood Out

THERE, in the lobby of a hotel, we met a plump little man (not nearly so plump as he is now) with an air of great importance and authority. One of his front teeth was broken off, and it gave him an odd appearance every time he opened his mouth.

Apart from that his face would be hard to describe because it had no striking peculiarities. But no description is necessary. That face has now become familiar to the public in newspaper photographs bearing the caption: "Whittaker Chambers."

Except for the now repaired tooth and a considerable gain in weight, Chambers' appearance does not seem to me to have changed perceptibly since the day I first met him some 13 years ago.

My second contact—still nameless—spoke in a voice so low it was almost impossible to understand him, as if a life-long practice of being on guard against eavesdroppers had become a habit with him. Harold seemed overawed in his presence.

I followed them into a cab. The new contact had a book in his hand, and observing that I glanced at it, he said: "This is the only good book I've been able to find on the German intelligence system."

I started to ask: "Did you say the German intell —"

He suddenly thrust his head forward, puckered his mouth, put a finger over it and glared first at me, then at the driver. After that I kept my mouth shut until we were seated in a restaurant.

Informed and Shrewd

THEN MY new contact and I plunged into a conversation on world affairs. I was enormously impressed with his fund of knowledge of events and personalities and his shrewd observations on them. It pleased me very much to see that my briefer remarks were making a favorable impression on him.

When we parted, I asked Contact No. 2 for a name, as I had asked Harold before. "Carl," was his prompt reply.

"How about a last name?"

"Oh-h-h . . . Carlson."

My reason for asking for last names was that I wanted to be able to make an introduction in the normal manner if I should run into a friend or acquaintance when with one of these contacts. Of course, one could easily think of some name on the spur of the moment, but I find it hard to think things up quickly.

In the restaurant, Carl sat opposite me, and Harold on my right. About half-way through dinner or later, Harold turned his head around to the right and seemed to be staring at the floor behind him. He remained in this attitude most of the time from when this started until we left the restaurant. He was sulking. At the time I was puzzled and astonished. Later I learned that he was jealous of my other contact and resented having to introduce me to him.

Later, when I came to know Carl, or Chambers, very well, I discussed the incident with him and learned that Harold could have been very severely disciplined for it—perhaps dismissed from the "apparatus" (spy ring). Carl, although he had a personal dislike for Harold, hated to get a person into trouble and took no action.

Weekly Dinner Dates

AFTER THE first meeting, I saw Carl only on rather rare occasions. But in 1937 my meetings with him became frequent. Then for some months I had lunch or dinner appointments with him almost every week.

Unlike Harold, Carl had traveled widely. I could scarcely ever mention a country in the world but Carl would speak with an intimate knowledge of it. At that, Carl had a prankish, boyish sense of humor that might easily have made him talk as if he had traveled in a country just for a lark and for the sheer fun of bluffing.

He had a slight accent which made me sure he was a foreigner. At first I thought he might be a Russian, but as I listened to his accent I realized it was definitely not Russian. Having done a little traveling myself and met people of various nationalities, I took some pride in being able to recognize accents. Soon I was tantalized by Carl's elusive peculiarities of speech, and I found myself making all kinds of wild guesses.

Once Carl took me to a Chinese restaurant and ordered the meal from a menu printed in Chinese characters. He spent the whole evening talking about the Chinese people and Chinese politics in such intimate detail that I had no doubt he had spent a considerable time there.

He had evidently traveled around Europe and had spent considerable time in Moscow, becoming acquainted with some very important people there.

While there could be no doubt as to Carl's complete sincerity as a Communist, at least during the early period of our friendship, his mind was far less rigid than Harold's. In discussing personalities, he would speak in the same detached, humorous spirit whether they were friends or enemies.

Occasionally I found his air of authority a trifle irritating, and I think Harold must have felt his arrogance unbearable, but I was impressed with his self-confidence, and sensed that he could handle the most difficult and dangerous problems of underground work with all the ease that comes of long experience.

Play-Acting Repulsive

WITH THESE clandestine conversations in restaurants, and the traffic in Government papers, going from my desk in the State Department to the Communists for microfilming, I was leading a double life. At first, I felt a glow of pride in the thought that I was doing something practical to protect mankind from its worst enemies. The risks involved in the undertaking occasionally made me nervous, but more often exhilarated.

But I soon discovered that in many ways my temperament was ill-adapted to this kind of life. I had formed a life-long habit of being frank and forthright, sometimes to the point of tactlessness. I had always taken pride in living my life in accordance with my own ideas, rather than conforming to a pattern set by convention or public opinion. I had felt that this was essential to my self-respect and integrity.

Then, at the age of 32, I had to live a large part of my life pretending to be something other than my real self—play acting. My inner self rebelled against it.

Had it not been for my underground work with the Communists and my belief in its importance, I would probably have decided to leave the State Department after the first two weeks—as soon as I could find a satisfactory job elsewhere. The atmosphere of the department was thoroughly repugnant to my tastes.

According to European tradition, no profession is better suited to an aristocrat than diplomacy. It is a weakness of some Americans that they are overly impressed with the European nobilities. In particular, some Americans of wealthy families have admired the titles and the ceremonial that served to set the nobility apart from the common people. Some of them have chosen diplomacy as a career because it opened the door to social intercourse with the European nobility.

Men of that type held a number of important positions in the department and largely dominated its atmosphere. They were particularly strong in the European Division.

At first I gave little attention to this situation. I continued to be myself, wearing no garters and sometimes letting my hair grow for six weeks without a visit to the barber. The socially elite officials regarded me as a queer character, but that didn't trouble me. I was not their type, and I had no wish to be.

After a while, however, I realized that I would be a hopeless failure in the department if I did not conform to conventional patterns.

I had to make myself into a tolerably good imitation of the well-dressed man and dignified official or fail in my contribution to the saving of the world.

That was a strong motive with me, and, with a great effort I managed to overcome my probably psychopathic aversion to being conventional. There came a time when I even sported a handkerchief in the breast pocket of my coat.

But that was only a small part of my problem. Some of the socially superior characters were extremely difficult for me to get along with. Furthermore, I sometimes had difficulty getting along even with totally innocuous colleagues, who never gave them-

German Laws Wring Blood Out of DPs

By Fred M. Hechinger

BAD KISINGEN, Germany (via Airmail).—If German treatment of displaced persons is taken as a barometer of this country's sense of justice and fair play, then the outlook for the future is hardly encouraging. The outraged report of a young Ukrainian escapee from communism, who was insulted and pushed off a German streetcar as a "foreigner," might be passed over as an unfortunate but unusual incident; but the legal discrimination against displaced persons here is both serious and significant.

Under a recent German law, local banks are again permitted to grant personal credits for the establishment of businesses and similar purposes. No part of the law excludes displaced persons. But a special clause says that applicants are entitled to the same amount of credit as they had in 1940. Obviously the DP had no credit here then.

Incidentally, that same clause also denies credit to anti-Nazis and persecutees who spent 1940 in jail or concentration camp. The more prosperous the Nazi in 1940, the sounder his credit rating in 1949.

Any German or DP is legally entitled to fight for the restitution of personal property lost to the Nazis in Germany. All he has to do is to identify the property, hire a lawyer and fight the case out in court. But the DP, who is striving to be resettled abroad at the earliest possible date, is also fighting against time, quite aside from his general inability to put up the money for drawnout legal action.

Should any DP actually win his case and receive reimbursement in German money, he finds himself unable to take the currency with him to the country of his destination.

Knows the Looter

AT A RECENT conference of editors of the DP press here, a former Yugoslav journalist pointed out that the law states that restitution refers to "property confiscated in Germany only."

"My valuable library was stolen by an invading Nazi officer in Slovenia," said the Yugoslav editor. "I can state the value of that library, locate the books in Germany, point out the Nazi who took them and is using them. But it would do no good. The law cannot touch him because he plundered the books outside Germany."

An International Refugee Organization official presented the next instance of German "justice." Paper for the DP press is provided by IRO outside the German economy, according to a military government order. The newspapers are not for sale in the German market, but are confined to the DP trade. A certain amount of the printing is done by German shops and paid for by the DPs, frequently at prices somewhat above those charged German customers.

In other words, DP publishing in no way relies on German services or infringes upon the German economy aside from a direct contribution through printing orders. Yet it has been decided (and thus far upheld by the military government) that the DP press must pay corporation taxes to the German treasury. In addition, the editor must pay German income tax unless he turns over all the proceeds of his paper to charitable organizations.

$2 Take-Home Pay

SINCE August, 1948, all wage-earning DPs who receive IRO care and maintenance had been subject to a monthly deduction of 70 German marks from their pay. Of that amount, 50 marks went to the German economy while 20 marks went into a blocked IRO account which was to be used only with the concurrence of the military government.

Effective last April, this deduction was changed to 50 marks for every DP wage-earner receiving IRO care plus another 50 marks for the first adult dependent and 25 marks for each additional dependent regardless of age, but not to exceed 40 per cent of the gross income. The entire amount goes into the German economy.

In addition, DPs working in Germany are subject to social security, church and school levies. Yet no DP will be in Germany when his social security becomes due; most DPs support their own churches in their camps, and the great majority are members of religions which are not ordinarily represented here, and all DP schools are established by the DPs themselves.

When the first deduction from DP pay was made "retroactively," there were some who found themselves with a month's "pay" of seven marks, or about $2. At the Bad Kissingen headquarters, no IRO employe received take-home pay of more than 100 marks, or $33, that month. There had been no previous notice or consultation of the DPs when the military government order was issued.

Despite the irony of DP contributions to the German economy, Germans continue to be hostile to their own and the Russians' victims. The true perspective of the current picture was established when my German driver, sent on one exceptional occasion to a Polish DP camp for lunch, returned outraged over the insufficient food. He had gone to a German restaurant instead in order to get his normal meal. But his protest simply implied that the DP diet might be all right for Poles, but it was certainly not acceptable to him.

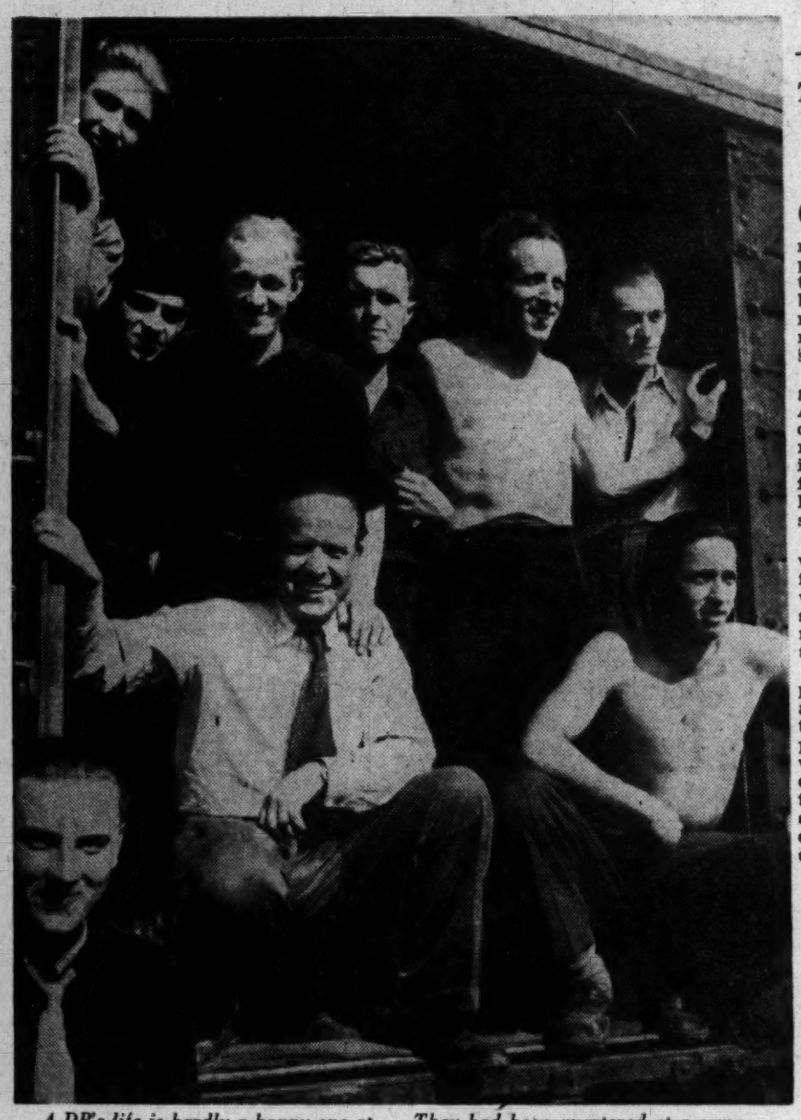
UNFORTUNATELY, the majority of Americans here have done little to aid the DP. While the Army and various agencies have established effective aid programs for German youth, no parallel efforts have been made for the victims of the Germans. Scores of "dependent" wives spend much of their free time working with German groups, but similar sacrifices for the benefit of DPs are the exception rather than the rule.

At a DP hospital in Munich, one of the DP doctors told me that in nearly three years he and his colleagues have not been able to establish any professional or personal contact with the United States Army doctors in the adjoining troop hospital. An American medical officer answered that there was no time for such contact.

Many Americans continue to repeat the German propaganda story that the DP is a blackmarketeering parasite. The fact is that the post-currency reform German has settled down to a life of comparative normalcy while the displaced person is generally worse off than before. Since the labor market has again become competitive, the chances for all but the lowest jobs have dropped considerably for the DP.

Few people mention the fact that DP labor participated prominently in the loading and unloading operations and the maintenance of the airlift; but rarerly is an opportunity missed to censure every real or alleged DP offense.

Since the International Refugee Organization is the only real protection for the displaced in Germany, it would be tragic if any DPs were to be left in this hostile country after the IRO charter expires.



A DP's life is hardly a happy one at best, and these former Polish Guards display nothing but glee at their departure for new homes in Holland. They had been quartered at a camp at Amberg, in the United States zone—and that was before German laws governing DPS became so restrictive

Arms Plan Reflects a Tough New View

THE WEEK IN HISTORY

By Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Mr. Schlesinger is associate professor of history at Harvard and is the author of the Pulitzer Prize-winning "The Age of Jackon."

CALLING upon Congress to take one further step in this Administration's bold revision of traditional American foreign policy, President Truman last week sought to put teeth into the North Atlantic Pact by requesting a supplementary program of military assistance for nations whose defense might be deemed essential to American security.

The drive for the Military Assistance Program drew its primary urgency from the Administration's desire to finish the job of convincing the people of Europe and the rulers of the Soviet Union that American isolationism was really dead. The argument for MAP also reflected, however, new and hardboiled judgments about the European strategic situation.

For many months after the close of the war, many American policy-makers had been fascinated by the theory that, in case of war, the Red Army could not be stopped short of the English Channel and the Pyrenees. In time, however, top officials began to count the cost of this pessimism.

On the political side, they noted that the people of the Continent, while enthusiastic about an American policy that would defend them, were unimpressed by an American policy that only promised to liberate what was left of them after bitter months of Soviet occupation on the economic side. They noted that the relinquishment to the Soviet Union of European mines and factories—and especially of the European steel industry—would cost the United States very much more than an investment in their protection. And, most relevant of all, they came to believe that the instruments of defensive warfare had developed to a point where it seemed conceivable that western Europe could be held against the Red army. MAP meant an American decision that vital portions of continental Europe could be defended.

The Senate Recoils

THE SENATE, however, was notably less favorable to MAP than it had been to the pact. Even such powerful internationalist Republicans as Senators Vandenberg and Dulles recoiled from the Administration proposal. Economy-minded Senators regarded MAP as too expensive; constitutionalists felt that it involved too indefinite a grant of power to the Executive; some quarreled with its strategic presuppositions; others just thought that the report of the death of American isolationism was greatly exaggerated.

The bipartisan foreign policy had gone into one of its chronic phases of constipation—a condition promoted by the failure of the State Department to consult in advance with Republican leaders. Given the chilly atmosphere in Congress, a stop-gap military aid program, along lines proposed by Dulles and Vandenberg, seemed more likely than Truman's full-dress version.

At the same time, ERP ran into new difficulties. In Paris, Britain reported to the Marshall Plan nations that, in view of the dollar crisis, it would require a larger slice of Marshall Plan aid next year to keep its head above water. And in Washington, Senator McLellan of Arkansas, sponsor of an amendment which would convert the Marshall Plan into an instrument for dumping the American farm surplus into Europe, succeeded through parliamentary sleight-of-hand in having the whole bill returned to committee when his own amendment faced defeat on the Senate floor.

In the meantime, Francis Cardinal Spellman's attack on Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt called attention to the controversy in the House over Federal aid to education. Mrs. Roosevelt had written favorably of the Barden bill, which would confine public funds to public schools. Cardinal Spellman and other leading Catholics have been waging a campaign to cut parochial schools in on the Federal aid.

Many Americans, who had regarded this as the kind of issue on which two opinions were possible in a democracy, were dismayed to find the Roman Catholic Cardinal accusing Mrs. Roosevelt of "anti-Catholicism" and calling Representative Barden an "apostle of bigotry."

The New York Herald Tribune characterized the Spellman letter to Mrs. Roosevelt as "regrettable," and the New York Times stated its belief that "Cardinal Spellman will come to realize that Mrs. Roosevelt cannot be justly charged with prejudice or bigotry." Mrs. Roosevelt herself remarked, "I am sure the cardinal has written in what to him seems a Christian and kindly manner, and I wish to do the same."

Some observers wondered whether the Spellman letter and the campaign against the Barden bill were part of a general Vatican policy of consolidation, manifested also in the recent excommunication of Catholic Communists, in the prosecution of anti-Protestant measures in Spain and in the political activities of Josef Cardinal Frings in Germany.

As for the Barden bill itself, the religious opposition seemed to have killed it; and late attempts to work out a compromise aid-to-education measure did not appear to be getting anywhere.

Brazil Plans To Harness Deadly River

By Carlos R. Escudero

Associated Press Staff Writer

RIO DE JANEIRO—Brazil is trying to open up one of its wild and rich areas, as large as France and half of the United Kingdom, just short of Texas-size.

The idea is to tame the unruly Sao Francisco and dam the rivers that run into it. The area taken in is about 263,000 square miles in five states. The model is the Tennessee Valley system in the United States.

In terms of hundreds of millions of cruzeiros and 20 years' time, the aims are to control floods, improve waterways, produce electric power, get people to settle there and develop the area. That means a fight against the death that comes on tiny wings—malaria.

(The present purchasing value of the cruzeiro is about 5.44 cents, or about $54,400 to the million—Editor's note.)

The Tennessee winds along from Knox County to Paducah for some 652 miles. The Sao Francisco runs and rages 1964 miles in a mighty hook northward above Rio de Janeiro looping toward the Atlantic Ocean. If it ran the other way it would hit Buenos Aires by way of Montevideo.

Risk Death for Gold

FOR its size, the area has few people. Malaria is deadly. The river has killing moods. Why get in there? Because the potential wealth is said to be huge. Such things as gold, diamonds, iron, manganese, bauxite, phosphates, limestone, wheat and other grains, and cattle.

What will it cost? By law the country must give the planners—private enterprise is in on this, too—not less than 1 per cent of its tax revenue each year for 20 years. That means now 180 million cruzeiros. By next year it should be about 540. The sum may reach 2400 million.

About seven million people live in the area. The climate varies from mild and pleasant to hot and nasty. The upper river runs through rough mountain country, Belo Horizonte (Fair Horizon), a 50-year-old city of 300,000 is in this region.

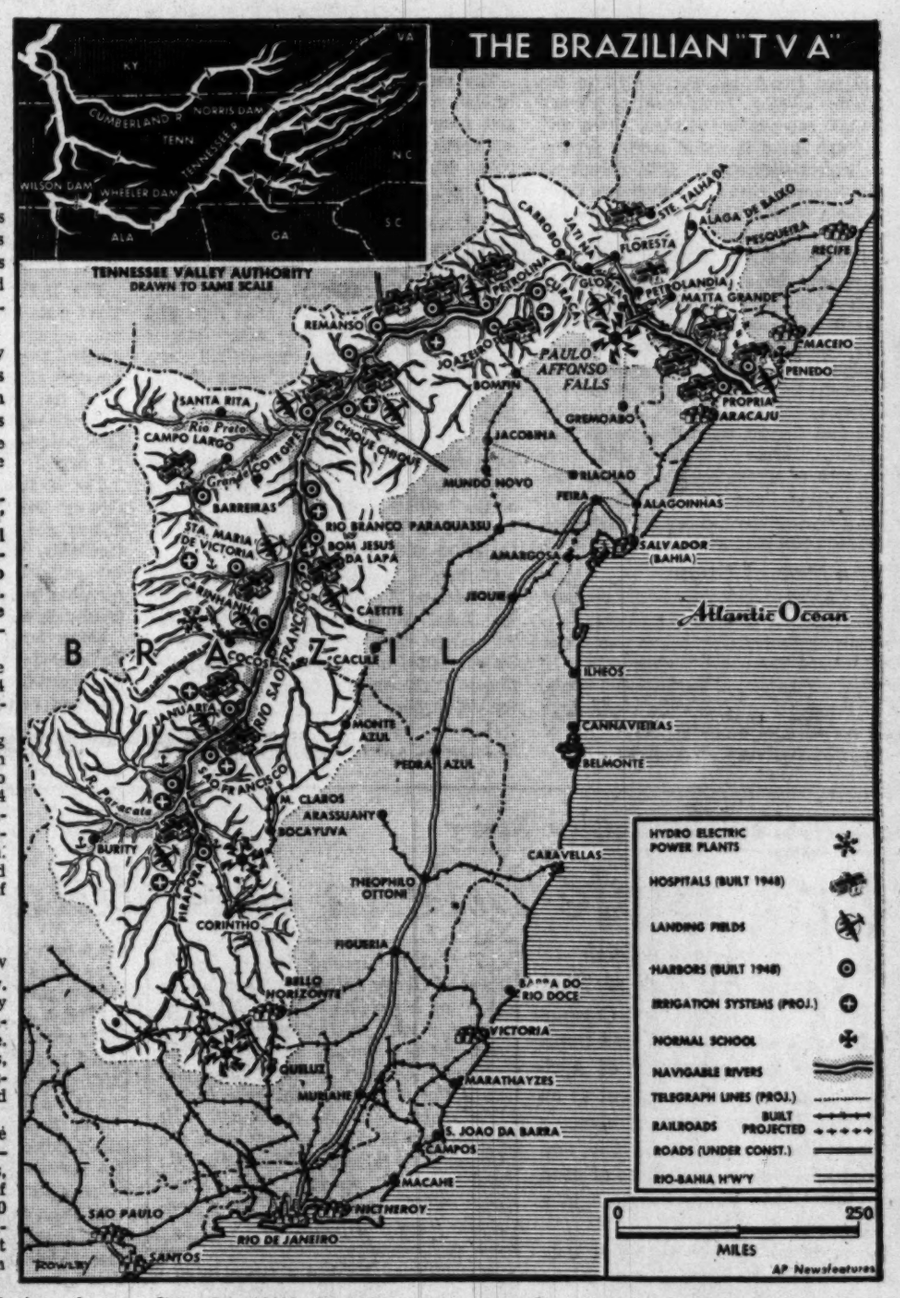
To get power, several plants will be constructed on the rivers. One of the largest is being built at the Paulo Affonso Falls, on the Sao Francisco. The pilot plant is ready now. It produces 2000 kilowatts and is geared for 5000. Its power will build the big one, which, in time, may give up to 440,000 kilowatts.

Plan Ambitious

THE PLAN calls for 10 landing fields, three power plants, 12 irrigation dams, 33 area hospitals, three health centers, four health outposts, one rural school for teachers, docks in 27 river ports, a river shipyard, eight highways, several feeder roads, a regional postoffice. Some of the hospitals are ready now. The government will improve rivers and harbors.

There is so much stress on cheap power from water because Brazil produces only two or three million tons of coal a year. Brazil spends, in dollars it can hardly afford, three million cruzeiros a day for imported gasoline. It pays 400 cruzeiros a ton for coal imported from Cardiff.

To fight malaria the government spent in two years, from 1946 to 1948, about 20 million cruzeiros, mostly for imported DDT. This year the DDT plan calls for spraying 200,000 homes. Eight million suffer with the disease. Four and a half millions are in the Sao Francisco area.



600 Million Mark a 'Fourth of July'

By Sigrid Arne

Associated Press Staff Writer

THE pink-cheeked Icelandic fisherman, the slant-eyed worker in the rice paddies of Burma, the bushy-haired Ethiopian herdsman—they and some 600 million other men and women in 16 nations have celebrated a "Fourth of July" since World War II.

While 100 million Europeans lost their political freedom behind the Iron Curtain, six times as many have won their right to completely or partially run their own governments.

The largest chunk of humanity to shake foreign rule was in British India—450 million—and Britain, of all the centers of empire, has freed more of her subjects to go it on their own than any other.

These are the new political "persons" that have joined the family of nations:

Syria and Lebanon

THESE small Arab states were chipped off the old Turkish empire after World War I. From 1920 to 1941 they were French protectorates. At the start of World War II—when the Allies needed a friendly Arab world—the French military commander in the area signed an independence treaty.

Ethiopia

EARLY in World War II, Ethiopia was taken by Italy. The British soon liberated the nation, with provision for British use of Ethiopian railroads. On May 25, 1944. The Ethiopians took back full control of their nation and set up a two-house Parliament.

Iceland

THIS little land of 134,000 people celebrated the one-thousandth anniversary of its Parliament. But from 1814 to 1944 Iceland lived under Danish rule. On June 17, 1944, it proclaimed itself a republic.

Indo-China

THE shift here has been, and, is painful. On March 6, 1946, the old ruler, France, recognized the Republic of Viet Nam, to be formed from the five old divisions of Indo-China. But war with Communists still blurs the new republic's fate, and something like 100,000 French troops remain.

This month Viet-Nammese formed a government. The leaders announced their intention of staying inside the French union.

The Philippines

THE United States ruled these islands from 1898 to July 4, 1946, when they became an independent republic. The new government has given the United States a 99-year lease on military bases, and the United States voted them war damage relief.

India and Pakistan

AFTER more than two centuries of British rule, India gained independence August 15, 1947, breaking up into two nations, India and Pakistan. Both chose to stay inside the British Commonwealth.

Theirs was perhaps the most dramatic battle for sovereignty, led by little Mahatma Gandhi with his hunger strikes and his "passive resistance."

Burma

THIS British colony became independent January 4, 1948, in a treaty with the British. It chose to leave the British Commonwealth and "absolved" the British of any further protection of the Burmese, who had been dominated by the British since 1612.

The Malayan Federation

THIS is a union of nine states, ruled by the British since the last century. In 1909 the British granted Malayans the right to run their home affairs. On February 1, 1948, the Malays set up an independent government, with a provision that they will work with the advice of a British expert.

Ceylon

UNDER either British domination or rule since the eighteenth century, this rich island became a dominion on February 4, 1948. It can run its home and foreign affairs as it wishes, but its leaders have announced they will conduct foreign affairs in line with the British, as do such other dominions as Australia and Canada.

Korea

THE history of this proud people goes back to the twelfth century before Christ. They were annexed in 1910 by the Japanese and released in 1945 when American troops occupied southern Korea and Russians the north.

On August 15, 1948, an independent government was set up in the American half under United Nations supervision. In the north the Russians have set up a puppet government.

Ireland

THE Irish Free State, after all its bloody battles with the British, achieved a constitution in 1922. But only since World War II has it cut the last tie with London. It denied the British King any further right to approve Irish diplomats.

Palestine

THIS old chip of the Turkish empire was a British protectorate from 1920 to 1948, with a British promise of a "Jewish homeland" in Palestine. Jews translated that into a drive for an independent nation and gained it through a United Nations vote. But they lost a part of Palestine that the United Nations said should become another small Arab state.

Indonesia

SINCE 1602 the Dutch ruled these rich islands. During World War II, faced with a drive for freedom, former Queen Wilhelmina said Indonesia could have postwar political equality inside a Dutch commonwealth.

The Japs occupied the islands during the war. When they were driven out, the Dutch and Indonesians remained at such odds that the United Nations intervened. There is still no clear-cut governmental pattern. However, there is no doubt that the Indonesians will gain some form of independence.

Cyrenaica

THIS is part of the old Italian African colony of Libya. Its Arab tribes cast their lot with the Allies in the war after a British pledge they would never again have to live under Italian rule. The fate of Libya still hangs fire, but the Cyrenacians set up a government this year and London recognized it.

Sneers at 'Snyder Plan' Mask Soviet Trade Aims

By Edwin D. Gritz

Post Reporter

THE KREMLIN is reported to be secretly angling for long-range trade agreements with the United States while outwardly proclaiming the utter futility of capitalist efforts to salvage western European economy with a new "Snyder Plan."

This seemingly contradictory approach has been evolved, it is said, to make it appear that the western powers need Russian trade far more than Russia needs the west.

To maintain this masquerade, the Soviet Union is making a special effort to brand the Marshall Plan a "fiasco" which has forced Treasury Secretary John W. Snyder to speed to Europe with an emergency "superplan" for economic salvation. But even this "superplan," Soviet propagandists say, is doomed to fail, since the United States wants to "perpetuate an inherently contradictory state of affairs" by boosting exports to the maximum while "doing everything" to reduce and restrict imports.

Soviet leaders point out that western European countries "have warned the United States" about the imperative need for increased trade with eastern Europe if normal trade balances are to be achieved by the scheduled end of the Marshall Plan in 1952.

The authoritative Russian weekly New Times further reflects the official position by declaring in a recent issue that:

Seeks Long-Range Pact

"THE ESTABLISHMENT of sincere economic cooperation between the two systems on a basis of equality, the normalization and expansion of trade between the countries of western and eastern Europe, are fully in the interest of the peoples."

Actually, however, the Kremlin is said to be particularly interested in extending trade agreements between eastern and western Europe to include the United States. The Kremlin, it is revealed here, is prepared to sign practically any long-range trade pact to bolster its own gasping economy.

While Washington is still officially silent, it is indicated that the bruited trade agreement is at the moment being stymied by what the Russians declare to be America's insistence on Soviet abandonment of eastern European industrialization. As for Russia's position on this point, observers call attention to a recent New Times declaration of Soviet policy which says in part that "the countries of the people's democracies have forever passed out of the imperialist system."

The Kremlin is also emphasizing in a variety of other ways that formation of the eastern European bloc has "limited the sphere of activities for the capitalist monopolies and deprived them of the opportunity to repair their fortunes at the expense of small nations, as was the case in the past."

U. S. Feels the Effects

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS here do not deny that the economic position of the United States has been seriously hurt by Soviet satellization of eastern Europe.

Likewise, no effort is being made to minimize the potential importance of the Council of Mutual Economic Assistance, set up last January by the Soviet government to offset the Marshall Plan and to develop a regional economy for the prime benefit of the Soviet Union.

With this in mind, the United States policy has been to trade sparingly with Russia and her satellites, particularly restricting potential war materials or trade which would further Communist industrialization.

Soviet officials, meanwhile, have been portraying this trade policy as penny wise and pound foolish, since Russia is not concerned with war but with mutually necessary trade relations.

While it is difficult to determine to what extent United States policy is determined by genuine war fears, it is known that the Government hopes to find Russia increasingly conciliatory now that her postwar harvest of satellite assets is about over.

One barometer of Russia's economic plight, observers point out, is the stepped up trade goals assigned to the various satellite nations. As officially announced by the Kremlin, Bulgaria is expected to increase her trade with the USSR by 20 per cent in 1949, Czecholsovakia by 45 per cent, Hungary by 200 per cent, Poland by 35 per cent and Romania by 150 per cent.

While the increases seem impressive, it is pointed out that in some instances, as in the case of Czechoslovakia, the country even now cannot meet trade and production schedules. And in other instances the figures are misleading because, as in Romania, it may merely mean a few units of some item since none at all was produced before.

Much Goes Elsewhere

INFORMATION based on newly computed figures from European sources indicates that Russia has by no means been able as yet to monopolize the imports and exports of her satellites despite continued insistence on more trade.

In the case of Czechoslovakia, Russia imported 120 million dollars' worth of goods out of total Czechoslovakian exports of 746 million dollars in 1948. Czechoslovakia, meanwhile, imported 117 million dollars' worth of goods from Russia out of total imports of 695 million dollars.

Poland—Russia imported 97 million dollars' worth of goods out of total Polish exports of 528 million dollars. Poland, meanwhile, imported 114 million dollars' worth of Russian goods out of total imports of 510 million dollars.

Hungary—Russia imported 23 million dollars' worth of goods out of total Hungarian exports of 140 million dollars. Hungary, meanwhile, imported 24 million dollars' worth of Russian goods out of total imports of 150 million dollars.

While exact figures for Romania and Bulgaria are unavailable, it is known that Romania is exporting about 20 per cent of her goods to Russia, while her Russian imports are about 35 per cent of her total imports. As for Bulgaria, Russia is reported importing 44 per cent of Bulgarian production, while Russian goods make up about 63 per cent of Bulgaria's total imports.

Tired of Shoddy Goods

EASTERN EUROPEAN economists here further emphasize that Russia's eagerness for well-made Western goods has been heightened by continuing production troubles within the Soviet Union as well as among the satellites.

Cited as an outstanding example of trade troubles between Russia and her satellites is the 1946 trade pact with Poland. Russia contracted to buy practically the whole Polish output of textiles on what the Poles at the time believed to be particularly unfavorable terms. As it turned out, however, Russia is said to have suffered a huge financial loss upon discovering that the textiles were unusually inferior since much of the production was by untrained labor.

Russia's principal economic returns, therefore, have been through outright looting or from joint stock companies where the Soviet government shares in the profits of satellite industries without being obligated to share any losses.

Other financial and war assets have come through such outright appropriation as that of the uranium mines in Czechoslovakia, which are being exploited with utmost secrecy by Russia without compensation to Czechoslovakia.

Improper Pressure

In his protest to the State Department against the irresponsible testimony of the anonymous "Witness No. 8" and the equal irresponsibility of Senator McCarran's Judiciary subcommittee in releasing it, Mr. Byron Price makes one point clear. It is that the employes of the United Nations are responsible not to any single member government, including that of their own particular citizenship, but to the General Assembly, which represents all member governments. The U. N. Secretariat is an international civil service, dedicated to serve the international community, not any part of it.

It is well to recall, as Mr. Price has done, what the Charter has to say on this point, particularly with respect to the Secretary General, target of "Witness No. 8's" most invidious insinuations. We had occasion to do so ourselves last fall when Mr. Lie was attacked by the Communist organ Pravda for allegedly serving "the interest of the Anglo-American bloc and not the interests of the peace and security of nations."

"The Charter," we wrote then, "says nothing about the Secretary General's tenure of office, nor about how he may be removed if necessary. It does provide that he shall not take orders from any member government nor take any action reflecting on his position as an international official 'responsible only to the organization.' The Charter also pledges the member states to respect the international character of the Secretary General's responsibilities and not try to influence him in the discharge of those responsibilities."

Watchdog Committee

Congress appears to be losing faith in its own "watchdog" committees. The House eliminated funds for the Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation and the Senate approved an item of $344,000 for the committee only after a bitter fight on the floor before the bill was sent back to the Appropriations Committee. Majority Leader Lucas tried to cut the joint committee's fund to $100,000, and Senator Vandenberg was willing to see it trimmed to $200,000. Mr. Lucas told the Senate that, while the committee has done good work and issued valuable reports, much of the same information is found in reports of the ECA and the President's quarterly reports to Congress. The Appropriations Committee, he said, will travel through Europe and through this country when Congress adjourns to do practically the same thing that the watchdog committee is doing.

This criticism supplements points that have been made against other so-called watchdog committees of Congress. There is a strong tendency for groups of this sort to overstep their function of gathering information for Congress and enter the field of policy-making and guidance of the administrative agencies that are actually doing the job. The Washington Post has warmly supported the idea of supplying Congress with experts to keep it better informed but these experts are less likely to get out of hand if they are attached to the regular standing committees. It is a notorious fact, as Senator Ferguson pointed out, that the Appropriations Committees are understaffed. The Senate would be less open to criticism if it were strengthening these committees instead of demanding increased funds for a watchdog committee of doubtful value at a time when ECA funds for actual aid to Marshall Plan countries are being trimmed.

Stockpiling

In cutting back the stockpiling of strategic materials the Senate Appropriations Committee seems to have made as serious a mistake as did Senator Elmer Thomas in making public confidential data on stockpiles in his effort to ridicule the program. Under strong pressure to reduce all governmental expenditures, we can understand why the committee should reduce the contract authority for stockpiling by 275 million dollars. But the effect is to emphasize the care with which the 560 million dollars still available to the Munitions Board for this purpose ought to be spent. In spite of this the committee has told the board to "buy American" whenever possible, an injunction which runs counter to the basic purpose of the program—the purpose, that is to say, of acquiring from abroad strategical materials which might be unobtainable in time of war.

According to Senator Thomas, the "buy American" provision is not intended to prevent the board from buying strategic materials abroad. But the board is expected to take American products whenever possible at reasonable prices. In the past this has been interpreted to mean that prices paid for domestic products should be not more than 25 per cent above foreign prices. Presumably the intent of the Thomas provision as well as of a similar requirement in the original act is to maintain active sources of supply in this country, but it lends itself to exploitation and special interest pressure. Furthermore, it would seem the part of good sense to concentrate our reduced buying of strategic materials in other countries so as not to deplete American resources and to give us stockpiles of the materials that it might be impossible to get in the event of war. If the Senate wishes to improve the stockpiling program, let it eliminate this subsidy provision and give the Munitions Board free rein to buy the materials for which, strategically speaking, the need is greatest wherever they can be obtained at the best prices.

Britain's Press

The warning voiced recently in England's House of Commons by Herbert Morrison that the Labor government might create a general council of the press by legislative enactment is an extremely troubling one. The establishment of such a council, voluntarily, by the newspapers themselves was recommended in the report issued a month ago by a Royal Commission on the Press. We trust that Col. Oliver Stanley, principal spokesman for the Conservative opposition, was right in refusing to take Mr. Morrison's threat seriously. "A statutory body could not be set up against the wishes of the press," Colonel Stanley observed, "and it would have no chance of success at all." What is even more important, it would undermine the essential character and utility of the press as a British institution.

The Royal Commission found, after a painstaking study, that British newspapers, like those in the United States, are imperfect but nevertheless genuinely free in the sense most important to Britons and Americans. This is to say that so far from being subject to governmental censorship, they serve as effective censors of the government. "The policy of the press," declares the report of the Royal Commission, "is dictated neither by the advertisers, nor by the government, nor by any outside financial interests. It is the policy of those who own and conduct the press."

It is freedom in this sense that the Russians so frequently and so vociferously equate with irresponsibility. When policy is determined by individual publishers and editors, it is bound to be diverse and conflicting. But diversity and conflict are the real wellsprings of freedom in the British view as well as in our own. Consequently, the commission looked first of all for the existence of these attributes in the newspapers of the country.

It found no dangerous degree of monopoly in the British press, although Kemsley Newspapers, Ltd., controls 17.18 per cent of the total number of general dailies in the country and 24 per cent of the provincial morning papers. We should suppose that so great a concentration of ownership would gravely limit diversity and give to Lord Kemsley a power over public opinion not wisely to be reposed in any individual. Moreover, the commission reported that "in 58 towns out of 66 in Great Britain in which daily newspapers are published, there is a local monopoly in the sense that there is only one daily newspaper or all the dailies are in one ownership." This is a situation only slightly less inimical to competition than that which prevails in the United States where there is competing ownership in only one out of the twelve of the cities where dailies are published. It is mitigated in Britain, however, by the fact that national newspapers circulate throughout the country.

The commission concluded that "all the popular papers and certain of the quality fall short of the standard achieved by the best, either through excessive partisanship or through distortion for the sake of news value." In some measure it condoned these shortcomings on the ground that "an industry that lives by the sales of its products must give the public what the public will buy" but held at the same time that "the press does not do all it might to encourage its public to accept or demand material of higher quality."

Like the unofficial American Commission on Freedom of the Press headed by Chancellor Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago, the Royal Commission believes that "free enterprise is a prerequisite of a free press," that state control affords no solution and that the remedy for journalistic defects must be found primarily in the press itself. Accordingly, it recommended, as did its American counterpart, a system of self-discipline—a general council of the press which would undertake, among other duties, to censure undesirable types of journalistic conduct. The newspapers in England were uniformly cool to the idea. As The Manchester Guardian observed, "Even the admixture of lay members and a paid chairman would not help if the rest of the council consisted, as it probably would, of representatives of newspaper organizations, among whom dog does not usually eat dog."

The British press would be very foolish, however, in our judgment, if it were to dismiss the suggestion as impossible simply because it appears to be difficult. The newspapers were foolish in attempting to interpret the Royal Commission report as a vindication. It was, in certain respects, a severe indictment of their practices. In considering the remedy proposed by the commission, they would do well to remember that self-regulation is vastly preferable to governmental regulation and that responsibility is an inescapable corollary of freedom.

Bad Policy

Nearly everyone, including those who are constant victims, knows that playing the numbers is a mug's game. It would be a mug's game even if it were run honestly. When the operators get through paying for protection, paying off the gangsters who keep other gangsters from muscling in on them and paying themselves for the discharge of their executive responsibilities, the division left for the winning players is something less than it might be. But honesty is not always the policy of the policy kings. The racket uncovered a few days ago after 18 months of painstaking investigation by New York's District Attorney Frank Hogan makes it plain that their aim is to skin the lambs they fleece.

A numbers ring operating in New York, New Jersey and Ohio under the auspices of some of gangland's most notorious figures made a regular practice of rigging the results on which it paid its dividends. The winning daily number was derived from two digits taken from the total of bond sales on the New York Stock Exchange plus a third digit supposed to represent the second digit of the day's total of the Cincinnati Clearing House. To make sure that the winning number would be one backed by no more than a few bettors, the ring is said to have had an accomplice in the person of an eminently respectable Cincinnati Clearing House official who rejoiced in the improbable name of Dennison Duble and who altered the clearing house total to accomplish the desired result.

According to Mr. Hogan, the ring had an annual take of about 50 million dollars. It is heartening to know that the police of New York seem to be on their toes in tackling one of the ugliest manifestations of organized gambling. Gang control of the numbers rackets is an evil going far beyond its pathetic effect on the duped bettors. It is a source of dangerous and spreading corruption and of gangster power. No community based on law and order can tolerate it.

Bollingen Blues

The tempest that has been raging in the literary corner of this troubled universe recently filtered through to Congress. It has to do with the award of the Bollingen Prize in Poetry to Mr. Ezra Pound, once indicted for treason and now a resident of St. Elizabeths Hospital.

The award was made by the Fellows of the Library of Congress, a group of poets appointed by the Librarian, apparently on the basis of public recognition. Apparently it was not a unanimous choice, for the decision was deplored by some of the fellows, including Mr. Karl Shapiro. More recently it has been the subject of a vigorous attack by a rival poet, Mr. Robert Hillyer, writing in the Saturday Review of Literature, and ardently seconded by the editors of that magazine. Among other things, Mr. Hillyer said that such an award to such a person as Mr. Pound amounted to an insult to the American dead.

It presently became plain, however, that Mr. Hillyer's indignation was directed less against Mr. Pound than against Dr. Karl Jung, the famous Swiss psychiatrist for whose residence the prize was named by its donor, Mr. Mellon, and against Mr. T. S. Eliot, the famous expatriate poet. Mr. Hillyer seemed to think that Mr. Eliot, by the same sort of hypnotism he has been exercising on the English departments of American universities, had virtually dictated the decision. Among other things Mr. Hillyer wanted to know how Mr. Eliot, a British subject, had come to be a fellow of an institution supported by American taxpayers.

Mr. Hillyer's animadversions have been greeted with approval from many patriots who consider Mr. Pound, as a traitor, undeserving of anything better than a prison cell, by some younger poets who resent what they deem to be the tyrannous influence exercised over the craft by Mr. Eliot and by Mr. Allen Tate and Mr. W. H. Auden (also among the judges) and by a few mezzobrows and lowbrows who, out of perverse curiosity, have attempted to read Mr. Pound's Pisan Cantos and have been unable to make any sense of them. Dr. Luther Evans, replying in the name of the Library, said, in effect, that while personally Mr. Pound's poetry gives him a pain in the neck, somewhat similar to the esthetic pangs complained of by Mr. Hillyer, he didn't see that this was any good reason that the judgment of mere bureaucrats should take precedence over that of eminent professionals. Moreover, Dr. Evans continued, the notion that a Government institution should judge poetry on its ideological rather than its artistic merits smacked to him of police states like the Soviet Union rather than of our freedom-loving U. S. A.

Mr. Eliot's disciples, who are apparently still numerous, and Mr. Pound's admirers, who are somewhat less so, have rallied to the support of the judges, and it seems quite likely that the battle will be continued for some years, and perhaps indecisively, in highbrow quarterlies like the Kenyon and Partisan Reviews.

We are inclined to agree with the fellows and with Dr. Evans that political considerations should not enter into what is essentially a question of esthetic judgment. But we are also inclined to think it rather silly and stupid of a group representing an institution supported by the Government to give official approval to a work deliberately addressed to the minute coterie which is willing to take eight or ten months off from the affairs of life to track down such meanings as may be concealed in its intricate allusions—especially when the meaning turns out to have been hardly worth the effort.

"Guess I'm Sure Of Another Term, Anyhow"

Brannan Plan Subsidy Costs

By Mark Sullivan

Aiken's Estimates

THE BRANNAN plan for paying Government subsidies to farmers, has been rejected in Congress. The rejection is not total nor permanent. It was a measure which would have authorized a "trial run" of the plan limited to three crops. In the debate, however, and in weeks of hearings before committees, much has been learned about the Brannan plan as a whole. One question, asked hundreds of times, has been, what would the plan cost the Government?

Any answer would have to be an estimate. By the Brannan plan, prices of some crops would be permitted to follow to whatever might be the natural level in the open market. Then the Government would pay to farmers a subsidy—equal to the difference between the price they received in the open market, and an official figure which the Brannan plan described as the "income support standard." What the open market price of any crop would be cannot of course be foretold, and neither can the amount of the subsidy on that crop. But persons well-informed in this field are able to make estimates.

ONE SUCH is Senator Aiken of Vermont, he is an authority, he is the Senate author of the price-support law now on the books. Light on what the Brannan Plan would cost appeared in answers Senator Aiken made to questions asked in the Senate. One question (asked by Senator Wherry of Nebraska) was:

"Let us take hogs as an example. Under the Brannan program . . . it is my understanding that the average farmer would receive approximately $19 a hundredweight. If pork sought its own level the price would probably drop below $15, possibly $12."

Senator Aiken replied: "I think it was anticipated that it might drop to $12."

Senator Wherry continued his question: "That would mean, would it not, that funds would have to be provided in the amount of the difference between $19 and $12 a hundredweight on every hog raised and marketed in the United States."

Senator Aiken replied: "I think it has been estimated by witnesses before the committee that . . . the Brannan plan . . . might cost approximately two billion dollars on hogs alone."

Then Senator Wherry asked about another farm product: "Does the Senator know what would be the result with reference to milk?"

Senator Aiken: "I think the cost is estimated at approximately $2,000,400,000."

Senator Aiken was careful to say that his figures were estimates. There are variable factors—the size of a crop, the price at which it might follow in the open market, and a margin of discretion left to the Secretary of Agriculture in determining the Government's "income support standard." Estimates from many sources about the amounts of subsidies under the Brannan plan vary greatly, but all are large.

ACCEPTING Senator Aiken's estimates, more than four billion dollars would be the cost to the Government as respects two crops if the Brannan plan were applied to them. And the plan as a whole contemplates similar subsidies for a number of crops, chiefly perishable ones.

Whatever would be the cost of subsidies paid under the Brannan plan on perishable crops, it is only part of the whole story. For the Brannan plan contemplates that as respects many crops, nonperishables or less so, such as grains and cotton, the existing method of price support would continue. As to these crops, the Government would continue to support the prices by practices which include buying large quantities and taking them off the market or making loans on them or otherwise.

With the Brannan plan shelved for the time being, the existing situation is this: The prices of practically all farm crops whatever, perishable or otherwise, are supported by the Government. The cost is already enormous, and it is likely to be greater, because of the extraordinary size of current crops. The expected total cost is huge.

This takes place at a time when the Government is not able to meet its expenditures. There was a deficit in the fiscal year ending last June 30 and a deficit is expected in the present fiscal year. Simultaneously there is a business recession. In this condition, whether the Government can or should continue to expend billions of dollars to support prices of farm crops is a question likely to force itself on the country.

Letters To The Editor

Letters of less than 200 words will be given preference, and all letters are subject to condensation. No communication can be returned.

"A Policy On Arms"

Your call in the July 27 editorial for a unified European defense system is certainly wise and timely. If Europe's defenses need bolstering (and what is needed to stop Russia is more than most of us realize, I fear), then we should not only furnish arms to the limit of our ability, but see to it that those arms are used as efficiently as possible. This can hardly be done with a collection of separate national armies.

But I cannot follow you in your argument for a separate federation of the Atlantic nations. This proposal can only be based on the assumption that the United Nations has failed, that it cannot be made adequate to keep the peace, that therefore, we should now resign ourselves to power politics, and play that game to the limit.

Is this a prudent assumption, in view of the fact that this country has never tried to give the U.N. the necessary powers to enable it to prevent war? Should we not make an all-out effort to secure these powers of government for the U.N. before we resign ourselves to power politics alone?

Power politics can give only a hope for peace—a hope that has often been disappointed in history. NEAL POTTER.

Dollar Crisis

The recent furor about the "dollar crisis" and the methods suggested by Mr. Snyder (pound devaluation) and those suggested by the French and British experts (increase in the price of gold to $55 an ounce), rather horribly demonstrates the puerile thinking in the world today on the subject of money and banking. I should like to recommend, as required reading for Mr. Truman, Snyder, et als. a book by Dr. Fred Bradford on the subject of money and banking.

The following are four possible methods of dealing with the crisis successfully:

All adverse trade accounts be converted into negotiable obligations of said country—these in turn, after being guaranteed by the United States Government, use as a basis for the issuance of Federal Reserve notes which will be used to pay United States exporters. If and when the accounts are paid off, the Federal Reserve notes will be withdrawn.

Accept foreign exchange in payment for trade balances. We in turn could use the foreign money to buy gold (to make childish thinkers happy) from Africa, which we can bury in Kentucky, or, if we wish to be more practical, we might just bury the foreign exchange in Kentucky.

Accept the fact that our great productive machine must be kept going—if we have to provide the medium of exchange to sustain it. Therefore, add a "prosperity tax" to our budget each year to pay off all trade balances. This will increase our taxes a few pennies, but since each dollar passes through about ten hands in the trade cycle, whatever we pay out in this prosperity tax comes back multiplied by ten. What's more it will prove Karl Marx was wrong. Capitalism won't collapse.

Lastly, best of all, though no one would believe it, issue whatever fiat money is needed to liquidate trade balances. With proper controls (managed currency) it is the only sensible kind of money, for, after all, money is only a tool, a carrier of value. CLARK C. COPP.

Arms Waste

Having had the pleasure of hearing the Hon. Robert H. Taft on the July 24 Drew Pearson hour, I wish to congratulate Senator Taft, who, in an eloquent way gave his reason for not signing the Atlantic Pact now before Congress.

I have given thought to this important subject also, and am still wondering why the United States would be justified in furnishing arms to foreign nations. What proof is there that some of these small countries might not become communistic and join Russia?

Thousands of our young men were sacrificed in two years to save foreign nations. The United States should now be so adequately prepared, that no nation would dare attack her. Why not keep [illegible] of those millions of dollars, to provide better homes for veterans of the two wars? MRS. M. L. WALDE.

Wadleigh's Confessions

Re your July 24 article on the confessions of Julien Wadleigh, I am wondering if you would be interested in publishing the posthumous papers of Benedict Arnold?

Edgerton's Record

Drew Pearson's July 25 column entitled "White House Repair Peek Advised," is another example of his propensity for smearing other people's characters by innuendo.

This time he selected Maj. Gen. Glen E. Edgerton, U. S. A., retired, as the victim. Pearson states: "General Edgerton has been a fine Army officer and well qualified, but so also were Generals Alden Waitt and Herman Feldman who were suspended from the Army because they gave Lobbyist James V. Hunt information on Army contracts that the press and public couldn't get."

I had the honor of serving under General Edgerton for a period of about four months during the war when he was Deputy Director of Materiel, Army Service Forces. In my opinion, which, I am sure, is shared by all who had any contact with him at any time, General Edgerton is one of the finest examples of the American Army officer. His broad experience, his competence and his tact and unfailing courtesy to all and sundry were his most outstanding characteristics. He was the type of officer who is able to elicit supreme loyalty from his subordinates. Because of his eminent qualifications, General Edgerton was forever called upon to tackle difficult situations—like straightening out the UNRRA mess in China. In view of the various problems, apart from those of a purely engineering nature, involved in the repair of the White House, General Edgerton is an eminently fitting choice for the job of heading up the project. The fact that he happens to be acquainted with the gregarious General Vaughn (a very plausible circumstance) and with Mr. Hunt does not make an iota of difference.

The Religious Issue In Education

Why did Cardinal Spellman accuse Mrs. Roosevelt of being anti-Catholic, and of fostering religious prejudice?

In order to stop the Barden bill, the Cardinal probably felt it was necessary to create a religious controversy of personal charges and countercharges, for only in such an atmosphere would the Barden bill be compromised in order to quiet an aroused populace.

The results were immediate. "Compromise!" advised Majority Leader McCormick. "Compromise" was the advice of a Washington Post editorial. On Monday The Washington News reported, "House leaders hope the health bill will soothe, in part, Roman Catholic objections." On Wednesday, Representative Morton drafted a bill omitting restrictions on parochial school assistance. And on Thursday, just one week after the release of the Cardinal's letter, Congressman Lesinski announced, "As far as I'm concerned, the Federal aid-to-education bill is dead until next year."

Thus has Cardinal Spellman lost a battle with Mrs. Roosevelt and won a war in Congress.

C. DOUGLAS SAGER.
Washington.

Catholics of the United States are paying directly 375 million dollars annually, and have spent $1,101,089,489 for buildings for education, through their schools. In addition, they have had to pay millions for taxes which are used to educate other people's children, and from which they receive little or no educational benefits for their own children. Catholics contribute many millions more annually for medical and charitable institutions in which people of all religions receive benefits.

Now it is proposed that Catholics be further taxed to pay for educational benefits, from which they are not to receive any return, which every American has a right to, regardless of religion. The absurd argument of separation of church and state has nothing whatever to do with it. If the state has the right to establish the standard curriculum requirements in religious schools, it can also give them their share of benefits.

The Catholic Church has remained amazingly silent through many vicious calumnies and injustices. The time is long past due when it should speak out vigorously and demand justice, through leaders, as Cardinal Spellman had every right and a duty to God, to do!

ISABEL MOORE.
Washington.

It is certainly most unfortunate that church issues have been injected into political questions like the aid-to-education bills before Congress.

Obviously the Catholic Church (rather than religion) has now embarked on a policy of injecting itself into the American scene, as for many generations it has done in Europe. If Catholics in America are going to indulge in this kind of block voting, there is danger that non-Catholics may be forced to play the game that way.

Is the whole world to be divided along Catholic and anti-Catholic lines as it now is in Europe? Let us hope not.

"Home Of The Brave"

I wish to say that I agree whole-heartedly with the sentiment expressed in Mr. Carroll Green, jr.'s July 27 letter, "Home Of The Brave."

As is well demonstrated by capacity attendance at the Dupont and Little theaters which are open to Negroes, I believe that the manager of the Trans-Lux would have nothing to lose in opening his theater to Negroes.

In discussions of patterns and policy a great deal is said about the need for education in dealing with processes of change. By showing "Home Of The Brave" the manager of the Trans-Lux is rendering a service to the community. He is to be commended for his part in this task of education. But to segregate and discriminate while showing a picture which condemns discrimination is, to say the least, inconsistent and ironical.

We Light a Torch in Drab Vienna

Special Dispatch to The Post

VIENNA, Austria.—Putting aside a letter bearing the crest of the royal household of King Farouk of Egypt, a goateed, 70-year-old count from a remote Carinthian village began to write the United States Information Service in Vienna.

"I am ready to sell a valuable watch which once may have been the property of Sir Francis Bacon," he wrote. "Fortunately, both His Royal Highness King Farouk and William Randolph Hearst have declined my offer. I am pleased to say this places me in a favorable position to offer you the watch for as little as $15,000."

The count didn't close his sale insofar as the information center was concerned but he did get a courteous reply. The letter itself was filed as routine under "W"—along with queries received about wine tasters ("Is there opportunity in America for a wine taster of distinguished palate?"); about hunting woodcocks ("I have prepared an excellent article about the stalking of woodcocks admirably adapted for an American magazine"); about widows ("Could you inform me where I can contact an attractive American widow, with suitable income?").

Handling mail queries is only one of perhaps a dozen ways in which the four information centers channel American news and thought to the Austrian public. They also lend, without charge, books, films, magazines, newspapers, arrange for lectures, displays, and research material. Their activities, in fact, dip into every cultural field, encouraging better understanding between the two countries.

Impressively Housed

IN VIENNA, the center occupies a handsome three-story building once housing the offices of the Hamburg-America Steamship line. Located on the city's swankiest shopping street, the building lies in the shadow of the enormous Vienna State Opera House, being tediously rebuilt after extensive bombing.

Somewhat smaller centers are located in Salzburg and Linz, in the American zone of Austria. Operated by the U. S. Army in Austria, they comprise a valuable link in the vast chain of information centers dotted throughout strategic cities of the world.

The Vienna Center was opened in the bitter winter of 1945 to a public more interested in getting warm than in absorbing culture. At that time U. S. officials estimated that 70 per cent of their customers merely came in to thaw out; and practically the entire city was on a constant hunt for food. "I remember when authors would beg us to trade them a CARE package for a full-length novel," says A. H. Hopman of New York, director of the USIC in Austria.

Hopman also recalls that Viennese employes, dreading to return at night to unheated apartments, would delay closing the center on the slightest pretext; many asked if they could sleep on the long tables in the magazine room.

In those days practically any reading matter in the English language appealed to the Viennese. A somewhat obscure book on the care and feeding of Hereford cattle was read until its binding collapsed, while there was a waiting list for "How to Be a Mind Reader."

But a lack of literary discrimination isn't characteristic of the Austrian, and as food and fuel became more plentiful they looked for more informative and interesting reading matter. "It has almost been like a barometer of Austrian economic recovery," says Hopman. "We're gradually heading into a buyer's market."

Has 30,000 Volumes Now

THE INFORMATION centers have kept pace with this growing discrimination through the simple device of finding out what the Austrians wanted to read and then securing it for them. They have built up the Vienna lending library from 1000 volumes to its present 30,000; magazine subscriptions from 50 to 500. Their success in pleasing their public is mirrored in attendance figures. In April, 1946, a year after the Vienna center opened, an average of 15,000 used its facilities. In the same month of 1949 more than 60,000 people entered.

According to Hopman, himself a Phi Beta Kappa, the center has made sure it accurately forecasts its readers' tastes by dabbling in social science and population lore. In the Danube River city of Linz, he points out, more than 25,000 of a total population of 110,000 are supported by the huge Linz Iron and Steel Works, once the Hermann Goering plant. Their dominant interest is in heavy manufacturing.

The Linz Center follows this theme from its displays in the window to the technical magazines on the racks. But, like Gary, Ind., Linz is a smoky and somewhat drab city. This means a liking for escapist literature also. Hopman sees to it that the wildest adventure stories obtainable are available in the library.

A different tack is taken in Salzburg, cradle of the world-famous music festival. Proud of its ancient cultural background, this city wants culture in large doses. Of a library of more than 4800 volumes, about 40 per cent are concerned with art, literature or music.

They Advertise Tastes

IT TAKES very little analyzing for the center to realize that the Viennese reader likes politics. His pleasure in expressing his personal opinions on the margin of books in itself is ample evidence. Some political tracts over a period of three years have, in fact, literally been turned into public opinion polls. "This book is trash," one reader will observe. A second will take up the issue. "I agree with you. (Signed) Ex-Concentration Camp Inmate." A third will jump into the discussion with a two-page essay, almost completely obliterating the author's original text, giving A and B a verbal thrashing for their lack of insight.

Through the quartette of U. S. centers, the Austrians have familiarized themselves with the American invention, the "open shelf" system, allowing readers to browse through the stacks at will. To the Austrian, accustomed to passing a slip containing the title of the book he wants through a cage strong enough to protect the Bank of England, this freedom of movement is revolutionary.

Several months ago, the chief librarian of the national library of Austria spent a week at the center studying the system. "Don't you lose a lot of books?" he asked Hopman, who replied that they suffered no more than the usual 2.5 per cent loss yearly. This amazed the director. He explained that under the Austrian system the civil servants employed by the library must pay for book losses. "Some of our people as a result make very little money," he added.

Attendance at the Vienna center is about 2000 daily. Saturdays and Sundays bring the picture magazine crowd. Understanding little, if any, English, they spend hours poring over pictures of American automobiles, refrigerators and gadgets. They talk louder than the scholarly weekday patrons, often nibble on black bread topped by lard.

Russians Stopped Coming

FEW, if any, Russian soldiers visit the Vienna center even though it is located in the International Zone of the city, which is under four-power authority. But in the two weeks after the Center opened in 1945 they came in platoons to buy copies of "America," a Russian-language United States sponsored magazine. Then one day they mysteriously stopped calling and haven't been seen in the center since. Nowadays, they send in Austrian Communists to do their buying.

While the Soviets have forbidden their soldiers to patronize the United States centers, they have by no means been unaware of the propaganda value of such an organization. Shortly after the American center in Vienna opened, the Soviets set up four "Maxim Gorky" reading rooms in their sector of the city.

The downtown Soviet center is a converted wine house containing two average-size rooms dominated by a pot-bellied wood stove. About 30 or 40 chairs are grouped around metal tables. On 15 feet of tablespace they display magazines and newspapers, a greater majority of which are the traditionally drab Communist publications.

The British and French also maintain reading rooms similar to the United States center though not on as elaborate a scale. Artistically, though, the French center is perhaps the best effort in the four centers. Colorful murals, attractive decoration bring a hint of Paris seldom found in conservative Vienna.

The French, British and United States centers keep close liaison, trading ideas, various window displays and books. They also share other common ground. Each reports that their most frequently asked question, heard dozens of times each day, is "How can I get to your country?"

This question, presumably, is one the Soviet centers don't have to worry about.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

High-Speed Road Network Projected

By Vern Haugland

Associated Press Staff Writer

THE Nation's road builders have drafted a 40,000-mile master highway system.

The network of broad, high-speed, trunk highways would link every important commercial and transportation center, 42 State capitals and 183 of the largest cities. It would provide routes free of cross traffic for swift passage through metropolitan areas.

The time-table calls for the system to be completed within 20 years. The estimated cost: $11,266,000,000. Congress has been asked to appropriate for the project at the rate of 500 million dollars a year, compared with 75 million dollars a year now being spent for work on major highways.

Actually, more than 37 thousand miles of the system already have been outlined by the Bureau of Public Roads (formerly the Public Roads Administration) and by the 48 State highway commissions. The remaining miles are held in reserve for bypass routes that may be selected in the future for defense purposes.

One Third Entirely New

ALMOST one third of the system will have to be new construction—departing completely from existing routes. This is expected to cost $7,236,700,000—$311,900 a mile for 9867 miles of rural construction and $2,055,000 a mile for 2024 miles in cities of 5000 or more.

The rest of the system already is in use, but only about 6 per cent, or 1998 miles of rural roadway and 300 miles of urban routes, is good enough that it won't have to be changed or improved.

An estimated 8687 miles will have to be widened, at a likely cost of $967,800,000. The average cost for 8306 rural miles is figured at $87,800 a mile and for 381 urban miles at $599,800 a mile.

The rest—14,283 miles—will need more than widening but does not have to be relocated to any considerable degree. This is expected to cost $3,022,700,000—$157,200 a mile for 13,467 rural miles and $1,109,800 a mile for 816 urban miles.

The total cost breaks down to $5,973,000,000 to bring the rural sections up to expressway standards, $5,293,000,000 for urban sections.

Of the amount, $735,000,000 is expected to go into the purchase of rights-of-way on rural sections, at an average cost of $23,200 a mile, and $1,667,000,000 on urban sections, at $517,600 a mile.

Road construction is expected to cost $5,869,300,000—$126,100 a mile in rural areas and $583,600 a mile in urban sections.

Tunnels Need Enlarging

THE cost of building 4893 new bridges and improving or rebuilding 5925 bridges now in use is estimated at $2,888,900,000. And $82,400,000 must be set aside for enlarging 15 of the 21 tunnels now in use and $23,800,000 for building five new highway tunnels.

Of the 13 rural tunnels on the system, seven are in Pennsylvania, four in Oregon, one in Idaho and one in California.

Six of the "least adequate" of the 13 are to be avoided by relocation of approach roads. The other seven are to be supplemented by parallel bores. Each of the resulting twin bores will carry one-way traffic.

Of the five new tunnels proposed, only one is in a rural area—on California's U. S. Route 40 at the approach to the Carquinez Strait Bridge.

The others are a 900-foot tunnel in Louisville, Ky., a 7001-foot expressway tunnel in Boston, a 2400-foot freeway tunnel in Kansas City, Mo., and a new Palisades tunnel in New Jersey.

12-Foot Traffic Lanes

TEXAS would account for about one fourteenth of the mileage of the entire system. California would account for more than one tenth of the total cost.

Design standards call for concrete or asphalt paving, four-lane divided highways where peak traffic volume exceeds 800 vehicles an hour, traffic lanes 12 feet wide in heavily-traveled areas and a 250-foot right-of-way in rural areas.

An absolute maximum grade of 6 per cent is prescribed. There are now 668 grades on the system exceeding that limit. The steepest grades on the system are U. S. Route 70 at Marion, N. C., almost 11 per cent for 0.15 mile, and U. S. 40 at Old Washington, Ohio, 10 per cent for a third of a mile.

Longest grade on the system is a 20-mile section of 4 per cent grade on U. S. 99 south of Bakersfield, Calif.

The Public Roads Bureau summary of the system as now in operation shows:

Surfacing—24 miles now unsurfaced. By far the greater part of the system, 32,642 miles, is paved with surface of high type—bituminous, concrete, bricks or blocks.

Widths of Surface—Of urban sections, 695 miles in pairs of one-way streets and 5274 miles in two-way traffic.

Only 168 miles of one-way streets are as much as 40 feet wide. Of two-way streets, 2069 miles are less than 30 feet wide, only 447 miles more than 60 feet wide.

Of 31,816 surfaced miles in rural areas, 27,669 have two-lane surfaces, including 241 miles less than 18 feet wide. The minimum surface width prescribed under any conditions is 22 feet. More than 55 per cent of the total rural mileage is too narrow by any standards.

"Three-lane roads and undivided highways of four lanes or more are not desirable, and have no place in the standards," the bureau says.

Shoulder Width—In rural areas, 421 miles have curbs instead of shoulders, and 6273 miles have shoulders less than four feet wide. Except in mountainous areas, the defined standards call for shoulders 10 feet wide, a condition now met by less than 29 per cent of the system.

Curvature—In rural sections there are 3199 curves of more than 14 degrees, the maximum recognized by the standards as permissible in mountainous areas—and more than half of them are in areas classed as flat or rolling. There are 15,115 curves, or about one every two miles, that are sharper than the standard specified for the type of terrain in which they are located.

Safe Stopping Distance—About 2087 rural miles, or 7 per cent, lack sufficient sight distance for safe stopping. Passing sight distance is undesirably restricted on about one fourth of the two-and three-lane two-way roads, or 7324 miles.

Railroad Grade Crossings—2047 remain, including 1262 crossings of mainline tracks; 2067 have been eliminated by grade-separating bridges. Of 760 that are major hazards and definitely should be eliminated, 574 are in urban sections.

There also are 118 intersections of rural routes with other highways that should be separated by underpass or overpass bridges.

Code Letters A New Weapon Of Detection

By William J. Conway

Associated Press Staff Writer

CHICAGO.—A new secret weapon is being wielded in the war against crime. It is the secret witness plan. It gives men or women who know something about a crime a chance to turn in their information and collect a reward without revealing their names.

The idea has spread rapidly in the last three months. It has been put to work against killers in Chicago and Los Angeles, against murderers and ballot burglars in Kansas City, against gunmen in Detroit, against hooded mobsters in Birmingham, Ala.

Sponsors—newspapers in some places, groups of citizens in others—have offered a total of $438,000 in rewards. None of the money has been passed out yet. An informant can't collect until the case ends in conviction.

The chief result, so far, has been information. Hundreds of letters have been received. Many of them offered information that looked helpful. In Chicago, for instance, 226 letters came in during the first two months. Forty-one contained what seemed to be good leads. Two of the Chicago cases have resulted in arrests.

$110,000 in Rewards

THE Chicago Sun-Times conceived the secret witness plan as a community service. It was sparked by an FBI report that Chicago had 326 murders in 1948, highest number for any city in the United States. The starting switch was pulled May 9.

The newspaper ran a series of reviews of unsolved murders—55 in all. It followed up with a full page list of 476 persons who had been slain since 1938 and whose slayers never had been brought to book.

The Sun-Times offered to pay $5000 for information resulting in the conviction of the guilty in each of the first 20 cases solved. Deadline for the rewards is July 5, 1950. (The total was increased to $110,000 by $5000 rewards posted in the slaying of two Gary, Ind., women.)

The plan hinged on the hunch that somebody knew something and would tell if secrecy were assured. Somebody saw the killer at or near the scene, overheard a snatch of conversation, found a clew, caught a glimpse of a license plate. Those who knew were directed to do this:

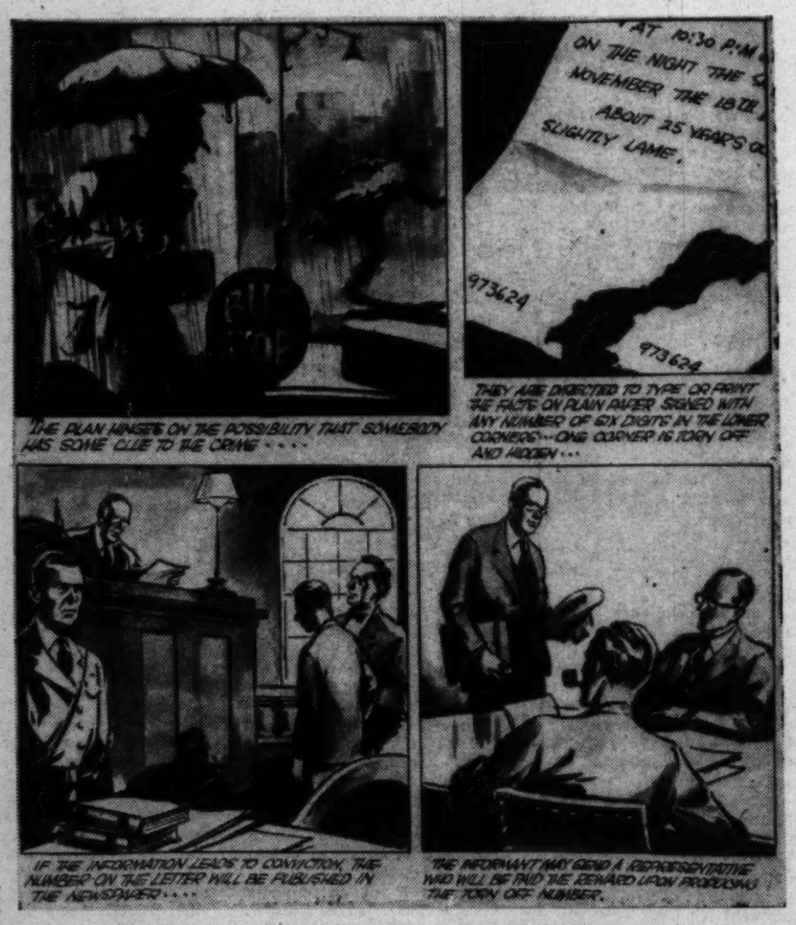
Type or print the facts on plain paper. Sign with any number with six digits in it, once in the lower left corner and once in the lower right corner. Tear off one of the corners and hide it. Mail the letter to Postoffice Box 3444, Chicago.

Police Given Copies

THE Sun-Times keeps the original letters. Those deemed worthy of investigation are copied, and the copies are turned over to the police.

If the information results in conviction, the informant's number will be published. Then the informant can send a representative—his clergyman or lawyer, perhaps—to the city editor with his fragment of the letter paper. If the pieces of paper and numbers match, the agent will get the reward.

So far, the newspaper has been able to report arrests on two of the murders it reviewed. State's Attorney John S. Boyle said coded letters provided the clews in both of them. The victims, Herman Englehard and John Onesto, were elderly men who were killed by robbers last year. Five men and a woman are being held for trial on murder charges in the two cases.



Tips go directly to the grand jury through a postoffice box. The jurors apparently have received some promising material. They asked, through the Star, for more information from three writers known only by their numbers.

UAW Offers $200,000

BIGGEST sum is the $200,000 offered by the CIO United Auto Workers June 11 in Detroit. The purpose is to bring in clews in the shotgun attacks on Walter P. Reuther, president of the union, April 20, 1948, and his brother, Victor, last May 24. Walter's right arm was shattered. Victor lost his right eye.

The UAW adopted the secret witness device to free any informers of fear of reprisal. Earlier reward offers had brought in no fruitful information.

The Veterans Committee Against Crime and Violence—made up of representatives of former GI organizations—set up the plan late in June in Birmingham. Citizens chipped in more than $3000 in reward money.

Prime aim was to get evidence in flogging cases. Many letters came to the committee and the three cooperating newspapers. Information was passed along to a grand jury. There was no indication of the part played by the code letters, but the jury returned 44 indictments early in July.

The secret witness system continues to function. And the vet committee chairman, Carle Wells, served this notice:

"The fight against masked mob violence has just begun."

The Jinx at Idlewild Is an Endurance Flier

By David A. Stein

Associated Press Staff Writer

NEW YORK.—Maybe it's the curse of the Canarsees.

They're the Indians who once lived on the shores of Jamaica Bay and with incantations wove spells to safeguard their fishing grounds.

New York's international airport, better known as Idlewild, now stands on the land of the vanished Canarsees. Officially just one year old, the world's largest commercial airfield still has a hatful of the troubles that have plagued the multi-million-dollar project ever since it began in 1942.

President Truman and Governor Dewey joined in dedicating Idlewild July 31, 1948. More than 1000 planes flashed overhead, opening a scheduled nine-day international air exposition. Millions were expected to attend. On the second day it rained, and it rained and rained and rained for six days.

Last year the Port of New York Authority, under terms of a 50-year lease with the city, took over the job of financing, finishing and operating Idlewild. The Port Authority, a joint New York-New Jersey agency, also administers La Guardia, Newark and Teterboro airports, as well as tunnels and bridges in the metropolitan area.

To End Congestion

IDLEWILD was expected to relieve crowding at La Guardia. But a bitter battle has developed between the domestic airlines and the Authority over leases and tariffs. It is still raging, with no solution in sight.

In its first year Idlewild has made hardly a dent in the volume of New York's air traffic. Eight lines, seven of them foreign, use the field. The mammoth airport, seven square miles in area, is nine times as big as La Guardia. For the full year, Idlewild handled 11,079 plane flights, 140,397 passengers and 7,278,363 pounds of cargo.

In one month (May, 1949) La Guardia handled more business than Idlewild in the entire year. Newark Airport, too, has been far busier than New York International.

Port Authority spokesmen, however, deny Idlewild is an "idle" airport. Domestic airline statements that the field is the "greatest transportation white elephant in history" bring the reply that 41 million dollars is being spent this year on development. La Guardia, a going concern for 10 years, is not comparable to Idlewild, the Authority says. Three new Idlewild hangars will be finished about May, 1950. Each will house four Stratocruisers. Meanwhile, Idlewild is operating at present capacity, the Authority claims.

Labor Tilts Plague

IN ADDITION to operating disputes, labor troubles have hampered field activities several times. Most recent disputes have involved the delivery of gasoline.

The handicaps of the last year follow a pattern set long ago. When Mayor O'Dwyer first inspected the field he asked Engineer E. J. Carillo "how in blazes" he ever had been able to build the field. Sixteen separate sets of blueprints for runway patterns had been considered during construction.

After dredging a mile and a half area for a seaplane base, the plans were changed and the basin had to be refilled. There were ideas for dog-leg taxiways to prevent confusion with runways, a maze of arcades stretching for three miles, wheel-shaped, turtle-shaped and doodlebug-designed administrative areas.

Much to the disappointment of the late Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia, the airport could not be opened in 1945, although its three-runway pattern was finished and the administration building 99 per cent complete. Plumbers had refused to hook up radiators and sinks, and telephone workers were engaged in a jurisdictional dispute with electricians—a fight which was to last 26 months.

Celestial Assault

ONE of the strangest mishaps occurred June 18, 1945. A rainstorm had loosed an inch and a half of water in 35 minutes. Then tongues of lightning hit all along the shore. Deep holes were dug on runways and flying rock killed a workman.

When all six runways had been finished a major error was discovered. The instrument runway intersected the approach path to LaGuardia Field. In other words, dangerous crossings had been set up on the aerial highways. A seventh runway had to be built, at a cost of more than two million dollars.

At other times sand dredged from the bay swirled into the skies in a cloud visible for miles.

But despite all their troubles, Idlewild officials still can smile.

Improper Pressure

In his protest to the State Department against the irresponsible testimony of the anonymous "Witness No. 8" and the equal irresponsibility of Senator McCarran's Judiciary subcommittee in releasing it, Mr. Byron Price makes one point clear. It is that the employes of the United Nations are responsible not to any single member government, including that of their own particular citizenship, but to the General Assembly, which represents all member governments. The U. N. Secretariat is an international civil service, dedicated to serve the international community, not any part of it.

It is well to recall, as Mr. Price has done, what the Charter has to say on this point, particularly with respect to the Secretary General, target of "Witness No. 8's" most invidious insinuations. We had occasion to do so ourselves last fall when Mr. Lie was attacked by the Communist organ Pravda for allegedly serving "the interest of the Anglo-American bloc and not the interests of the peace and security of nations."

"The Charter," we wrote then, "says nothing about the Secretary General's tenure of office, nor about how he may be removed if necessary. It does provide that he shall not take orders from any member government nor take any action reflecting on his position as an international official 'responsible only to the organization.' The Charter also pledges the member states to respect the international character of the Secretary General's responsibilities and not try to influence him in the discharge of those responsibilities."

Watchdog Committee

Congress appears to be losing faith in its own "watchdog" committees. The House eliminated funds for the Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation and the Senate approved an item of $344,000 for the committee only after a bitter fight on the floor before the bill was sent back to the Appropriations Committee. Majority Leader Lucas tried to cut the joint committee's fund to $100,000, and Senator Vandenberg was willing to see it trimmed to $200,000. Mr. Lucas told the Senate that, while the committee has done good work and issued valuable reports, much of the same information is found in reports of the ECA and the President's quarterly reports to Congress. The Appropriations Committee, he said, will travel through Europe and through this country when Congress adjourns to do practically the same thing that the watchdog committee is doing.

This criticism supplements points that have been made against other so-called watchdog committees of Congress. There is a strong tendency for groups of this sort to overstep their function of gathering information for Congress and enter the field of policy-making and guidance of the administrative agencies that are actually doing the job. The Washington Post has warmly supported the idea of supplying Congress with experts to keep it better informed but these experts are less likely to get out of hand if they are attached to the regular standing committees. It is a notorious fact, as Senator Ferguson pointed out, that the Appropriations Committees are understaffed. The Senate would be less open to criticism if it were strengthening these committees instead of demanding increased funds for a watchdog committee of doubtful value at a time when ECA funds for actual aid to Marshall Plan countries are being trimmed.

Stockpiling

In cutting back the stockpiling of strategic materials the Senate Appropriations Committee seems to have made as serious a mistake as did Senator Elmer Thomas in making public confidential data on stockpiles in his effort to ridicule the program. Under strong pressure to reduce all governmental expenditures, we can understand why the committee should reduce the contract authority for stockpiling by 275 million dollars. But the effect is to emphasize the care with which the 560 million dollars still available to the Munitions Board for this purpose ought to be spent. In spite of this the committee has told the board to "buy American" whenever possible, an injunction which runs counter to the basic purpose of the program—the purpose, that is to say, of acquiring from abroad strategical materials which might be unobtainable in time of war.

According to Senator Thomas, the "buy American" provision is not intended to prevent the board from buying strategic materials abroad. But the board is expected to take American products whenever possible at reasonable prices. In the past this has been interpreted to mean that prices paid for domestic products should be not more than 25 per cent above foreign prices. Presumably the intent of the Thomas provision as well as of a similar requirement in the original act is to maintain active sources of supply in this country, but it lends itself to exploitation and special interest pressure. Furthermore, it would seem the part of good sense to concentrate our reduced buying of strategic materials in other countries so as not to deplete American resources and to give us stockpiles of the materials that it might be impossible to get in the event of war. If the Senate wishes to improve the stockpiling program, let it eliminate this subsidy provision and give the Munitions Board free rein to buy the materials for which, strategically speaking, the need is greatest wherever they can be obtained at the best prices.

Britain's Press

The warning voiced recently in England's House of Commons by Herbert Morrison that the Labor government might create a general council of the press by legislative enactment is an extremely troubling one. The establishment of such a council, voluntarily, by the newspapers themselves was recommended in the report issued a month ago by a Royal Commission on the Press. We trust that Col. Oliver Stanley, principal spokesman for the Conservative opposition, was right in refusing to take Mr. Morrison's threat seriously. "A statutory body could not be set up against the wishes of the press," Colonel Stanley observed, "and it would have no chance of success at all." What is even more important, it would undermine the essential character and utility of the press as a British institution.

The Royal Commission found, after a painstaking study, that British newspapers, like those in the United States, are imperfect but nevertheless genuinely free in the sense most important to Britons and Americans. This is to say that so far from being subject to governmental censorship, they serve as effective censors of the government. "The policy of the press," declares the report of the Royal Commission, "is dictated neither by the advertisers, nor by the government, nor by any outside financial interests. It is the policy of those who own and conduct the press."

It is freedom in this sense that the Russians so frequently and so vociferously equate with irresponsibility. When policy is determined by individual publishers and editors, it is bound to be diverse and conflicting. But diversity and conflict are the real wellsprings of freedom in the British view as well as in our own. Consequently, the commission looked first of all for the existence of these attributes in the newspapers of the country.

It found no dangerous degree of monopoly in the British press, although Kemsley Newspapers, Ltd., controls 17.18 per cent of the total number of general dailies in the country and 24 per cent of the provincial morning papers. We should suppose that so great a concentration of ownership would gravely limit diversity and give to Lord Kemsley a power over public opinion not wisely to be reposed in any individual. Moreover, the commission reported that "in 58 towns out of 66 in Great Britain in which daily newspapers are published, there is a local monoply in the sense that there is only one daily newspaper or all the dailies are in one ownership." This is a situation only slightly less inimical to competition than that which prevails in the United States where there is competing ownership in only one out of the twelve of the cities where dailies are published. It is mitigated in Britain, however, by the fact that national newspapers circulate throughout the country.

The commission concluded that "all the popular papers and certain of the quality fall short of the standard achieved by the best, either through excessive partisanship or through distortion for the sake of news value." In some measure it condoned these shortcomings on the ground that "an industry that lives by the sales of its products must give the public what the public will buy" but held at the same time that "the press does not do all it might to encourage its public to accept or demand material of higher quality."

Like the unofficial American Commission on Freedom of the Press headed by Chancellor Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago, the Royal Commission believes that "free enterprise is a prerequisite of a free press," that state control affords no solution and that the remedy for journalistic defects must be found primarily in the press itself. Accordingly, it recommended, as did its American counterpart, a system of self-discipline—a general council of the press which would undertake, among other duties, to censure undesirable types of journalistic conduct. The newspapers in England were uniformly cool to the idea. As The Manchester Guardian observed, "Even the admixture of lay members and a paid chairman would not help if the rest of the council consisted, as it probably would, of representatives of newspaper organizations, among whom dog does not usually eat dog."

The British press would be very foolish, however, in our judgment, if it were to dismiss the suggestion as impossible simply because it appears to be difficult. The newspapers were foolish in attempting to interpret the Royal Commission report as a vindication. It was, in certain respects, a severe indictment of their practices. In considering the remedy proposed by the commission, they would do well to remember that self-regulation is vastly preferable to governmental regulation and that responsibility is an inescapable corollary of freedom.

Bad Policy

Nearly everyone, including those who are constant victims, knows that playing the numbers is a mug's game. It would be a mug's game even if it were run honestly. When the operators get through paying for protection, paying off the gangsters who keep other gangsters from muscling in on them and paying themselves for the discharge of their executive responsibilities, the division left for the winning players is something less than it might be. But honesty is not always the policy of the policy kings. The racket uncovered a few days ago after 18 months of painstaking investigation by New York's District Attorney Frank Hogan makes it plain that their aim is to skin the lambs they fleece.

A numbers ring operating in New York, New Jersey and Ohio under the auspices of some of gangland's most notorious figures made a regular practice of rigging the results on which it paid its dividends. The winning daily number was derived from two digits taken from the total of bond sales on the New York Stock Exchange plus a third digit supposed to represent the second digit of the day's total of the Cincinnati Clearing House. To make sure that the winning number would be one backed by no more than a few bettors, the ring is said to have had an accomplice in the person of an eminently respectable Cincinnati Clearing House official who rejoiced in the improbable name of Dennison Duble and who altered the clearing house total to accomplish the desired result.

According to Mr. Hogan, the ring had an annual take of about 50 million dollars. It is heartening to know that the police of New York seem to be on their toes in tackling one of the ugliest manifestations of organized gambling. Gang control of the numbers rackets is an evil going far beyond its pathetic effect on the duped bettors. It is a source of dangerous and spreading corruption and of gangster power. No community based on law and order can tolerate it.

Bollingen Blues

The tempest that has been raging in the literary corner of this troubled universe recently filtered through to Congress. It has to do with the award of the Bollingen Prize in Poetry to Mr. Ezra Pound, once indicted for treason and now a resident of St. Elizabeths Hospital.

The award was made by the Fellows of the Library of Congress, a group of poets appointed by the Librarian, apparently on the basis of public recognition. Apparently it was not a unanimous choice, for the decision was deplored by some of the fellows, including Mr. Karl Shapiro. More recently it has been the subject of a vigorous attack by a rival poet, Mr. Robert Hillyer, writing in the Saturday Review of Literature, and ardently seconded by the editors of that magazine. Among other things, Mr. Hillyer said that such an award to such a person as Mr. Pound amounted to an insult to the American dead.

It presently became plain, however, that Mr. Hillyer's indignation was directed less against Mr. Pound than against Dr. Karl Jung, the famous Swiss psychiatrist for whose residence the prize was named by its donor, Mr. Mellon, and against Mr. T. S. Eliot, the famous expatriate poet. Mr. Hillyer seemed to think that Mr. Eliot, by the same sort of hypnotism he has been exercising on the English departments of American universities, had virtually dictated the decision. Among other things Mr. Hillyer wanted to know how Mr. Eliot, a British subject, had come to be a fellow of an institution supported by American taxpayers.

Mr. Hillyer's animadversions have been greeted with approval from many patriots who consider Mr. Pound, as a traitor, undeserving of anything better than a prison cell, by some younger poets who resent what they deem to be the tyrannous influence exercised over the craft by Mr. Eliot and by Mr. Allen Tate and Mr. W. H. Auden (also among the judges) and by a few mezzobrows and lowbrows who, out of perverse curiosity, have attempted to read Mr. Pound's Pisan Cantos and have been unable to make any sense of them. Dr. Luther Evans, replying in the name of the Library, said, in effect, that while personally Mr. Pound's poetry gives him a pain in the neck, somewhat similar to the esthetic pangs complained of by Mr. Hillyer, he didn't see that this was any good reason that the judgment of mere bureaucrats should take precedence over that of eminent professionals. Moreover, Dr. Evans continued, the notion that a Government institution should judge poetry on its ideological rather than its artistic merits smacked to him of police states like the Soviet Union rather than of our freedom-loving U. S. A.

Mr. Eliot's disciples, who are apparently still numerous, and Mr. Pound's admirers, who are somewhat less so, have rallied to the support of the judges, and it seems quite likely that the battle will be continued for some years, and perhaps indecisively, in highbrow quarterlies like the Kenyon and Partisan Reviews.

We are inclined to agree with the fellows and with Dr. Evans that political considerations should not enter into what is essentially a question of esthetic judgment. But we are also inclined to think it rather silly and stupid of a group representing an institution supported by the Government to give official approval to a work deliberately addressed to the minute coterie which is willing to take eight or ten months off from the affairs of life to track down such meanings as may be concealed in its intricate allusions—especially when the meaning turns out to have been hardly worth the effort.

"A Policy On Arms"

Your call in the July 27 editorial for a unified European defense system is certainly wise and timely. If Europe's defenses need bolstering (and what is needed to stop Russia is more than most of us realize, I fear), then we should not only furnish arms to the limit of our ability, but see to it that those arms are used as efficiently as possible. This can hardly be done with a collection of separate national armies.

But I cannot follow you in your argument for a separate federation of the Atlantic nations. This proposal can only be based on the assumption that the United Nations has failed, that it cannot be made adequate to keep the peace, that therefore, we should now resign ourselves to power politics, and play that game to the limit.

Is this a prudent assumption, in view of the fact that this country has never tried to give the U.N. the necessary powers to enable it to prevent war? Should we not make an all-out effort to secure these powers of government for the U.N. before we resign ourselves to power politics alone?

Power politics can give only a hope for peace—a hope that has often been disappointed in history. NEAL POTTER.

Dollar Crisis

The recent furor about the "dollar crisis" and the methods suggested by Mr. Snyder (pound devaluation) and those suggested by the French and British experts (increase in the price of gold to $55 an ounce), rather horribly demonstrates the puerile thinking in the world today on the subject of money and banking. I should like to recommend, as required reading for Mr. Truman, Snyder, et als. a book by Dr. Fred Bradford on the subject of money and banking.

The following are four possible methods of dealing with the crisis successfully:

All adverse trade accounts be converted into negotiable obligations of said country—these in turn, after being guaranteed by the United States Government, use as a basis for the issuance of Federal Reserve notes which will be used to pay United States exporters. If and when the accounts are paid off, the Federal Reserve notes will be withdrawn.

Accept foreign exchange in payment for trade balances. We in turn could use the foreign money to buy gold (to make childish thinkers happy) from Africa, which we can bury in Kentucky, or, if we wish to be more practical, we might just bury the foreign exchange in Kentucky.

Accept the fact that our great productive machine must be kept going—if we have to provide the medium of exchange to sustain it. Therefore, add a "prosperity tax" to our budget each year to pay off all trade balances. This will increase our taxes a few pennies, but since each dollar passes through about ten hands in the trade cycle, whatever we pay out in this prosperity tax comes back multiplied by ten. What's more it will prove Karl Marx was wrong. Capitalism won't collapse.

Lastly, best of all, though no one would believe it, issue whatever fiat money is needed to liquidate trade balances. With proper controls (managed currency) it is the only sensible kind of money, for, after all, money is only a tool, a carrier of value. CLARK C. COPP.

Arms Waste

Having had the pleasure of hearing the Hon. Robert H. Taft on the July 24 Drew Pearson hour, I wish to congratulate Senator Taft, who, in an eloquent way gave his reason for not signing the Atlantic Pact now before Congress.

I have given thought to this important subject also, and am still wondering why the United States would be justified in furnishing arms to foreign nations. What proof is there that some of these small countries might not become communistic and join Russia?

Thousands of our young men were sacrificed in two years to save foreign nations. The United States should now be so adequately prepared, that no nation would dare attack her. Why not keep [illegible] of those millions of dollars [illegible]e, to provide better homes for veterans of the two wars? MRS. M. L. WALDE.

Edgerton's Record

Drew Pearson's July 25 column entitled "White House Repair Peek Advised," is another example of his propensity for smearing other people's characters by innuendo.

This time he selected Maj. Gen. Glen E. Edgerton, U. S. A., retired, as the victim. Pearson states: "General Edgerton has been a fine Army officer and well qualified, but so also were Generals Alden Waitt and Herman Feldman who were suspended from the Army because they gave Lobbyist James V. Hunt information on Army contracts that the press and public couldn't get."

I had the honor of serving under General Edgerton for a period of about four months during the war when he was Deputy Director of Materiel, Army Service Forces. In my opinion, which, I am sure, is shared by all who had any contact with him at any time, General Edgerton is one of the finest examples of the American Army officer. His broad experience, his competence and his tact and unfailing courtesy to all and sundry were his most outstanding characteristics. He was the type of officer who is able to elicit supreme loyalty from his subordinates. Because of his eminent qualifications, General Edgerton was forever called upon to tackle difficult situations—like straightening out the UNRRA mess in China. In view of the various problems, apart from those of a purely engineering nature, involved in the repair of the White House, General Edgerton is an eminently fitting choice for the job of heading up the project. The fact that he happens to be acquainted with the gregarious General Vaughn (a very plausible circumstance) and with Mr. Hunt does not make an iota of difference.

The Religious Issue In Education

Why did Cardinal Spellman accuse Mrs. Roosevelt of being anti-Catholic, and of fostering religious prejudice?

In order to stop the Barden bill, the Cardinal probably felt it was necessary to create a religious controversy of personal charges and countercharges, for only in such an atmosphere would the Barden bill be compromised in order to quiet an aroused populace.

The results were immediate. "Compromise!" advised Majority Leader McCormick. "Compromise" was the advice of a Washington Post editorial. On Monday The Washington News reported, "House leaders hope the health bill will soothe, in part, Roman Catholic objections." On Wednesday, Representative Morton drafted a bill omitting restrictions on parochial school assistance. And on Thursday, just one week after the release of the Cardinal's letter, Congressman Lesinski announced, "As far as I'm concerned, the Federal aid-to-education bill is dead until next year."

Thus has Cardinal Spellman lost a battle with Mrs. Roosevelt and won a war in Congress.

C. DOUGLAS SAGER.
Washington.

Catholics of the United States are paying directly 375 million dollars annually, and have spent $1,101,089,489 for buildings for education, through their schools. In addition, they have had to pay millions for taxes which are used to educate other people's children, and from which they receive little or no educational benefits for their own children. Catholics contribute many millions more annually for medical and charitable institutions in which people of all religions receive benefits.

Now it is proposed that Catholics be further taxed to pay for educational benefits, from which they are not to receive any return, which every American has a right to, regardless of religion. The absurd argument of separation of church and state has nothing whatever to do with it. If the state has the right to establish the standard curriculum requirements in religious schools, it can also give them their share of benefits.

The Catholic Church has remained amazingly silent through many vicious calumnies and injustices. The time is long past due when it should speak out vigorously and demand justice, through leaders, as Cardinal Spellman had every right and a duty to God, to do!

ISABEL MOORE.
Washington.

It is certainly most unfortunate that church issues have been injected into political questions like the aid-to-education bills before Congress.

Obviously the Catholic Church (rather than religion) has now embarked on a policy of injecting itself into the American scene, as for many generations it has done in Europe. If Catholics in America are going to indulge in this kind of block voting, there is danger that non-Catholics may be forced to play the game that way.

Is the whole world to be divided along Catholic and anti-Catholic lines as it now is in Europe? Let us hope not.

"Home Of The Brave"

I wish to say that I agree whole-heartedly with the sentiment expressed in Mr. Carroll Green, jr.'s July 27 letter, "Home Of The Brave."

As is well demonstrated by capacity attendance at the Dupont and Little theaters which are open to Negroes, I believe that the manager of the Trans-Lux would have nothing to lose in opening his theater to Negroes.

In discussions of patterns and policy a great deal is said about the need for education in dealing with processes of change. By showing "Home Of The Brave" the manager of the Trans-Lux is rendering a service to the community. He is to be commended for his part in this task of education. But to segregate and discriminate while showing a picture which condemns discrimination is, to say the least, inconsistent and ironical.

Brannan Plan Subsidy Costs

By Mark Sullivan

Aiken's Estimates

THE BRANNAN plan for paying Government subsidies to farmers, has been rejected in Congress. The rejection is not total nor permanent. It was a measure which would have authorized a "trial run" of the plan limited to three crops. In the debate, however, and in weeks of hearings before committees, much has been learned about the Brannan plan as a whole. One question, asked hundreds of times, has been, what would the plan cost the Government?

Any answer would have to be an estimate. By the Brannan plan, prices of some crops would be permitted to follow to whatever might be the natural level in the open market. Then the Government would pay to farmers a subsidy—equal to the difference between the price they received in the open market, and an official figure which the Brannan plan described as the "income support standard." What the open market price of any crop would be cannot of course be foretold, and neither can the amount of the subsidy on that crop. But persons well-informed in this field are able to make estimates.

ONE SUCH is Senator Aiken of Vermont, he is the Senate author of the price-support law now on the books. Light on what the Brannan Plan would cost appeared in answers Senator Aiken made to questions asked in the Senate. One question (asked by Senator Wherry of Nebraska) was:

"Let us take hogs as an example. Under the Brannan program . . . it is my understanding that the average farmer would receive approximately $19 a hundredweight. If pork sought its own level the price would probably drop below $15, possibly $12."

Senator Aiken replied: "I think it was anticipated that it might drop to $12."

Senator Wherry continued his question: "That would mean, would it not, that funds would have to be provided in the amount of the difference between $19 and $12 a hundredweight on every hog raised and marketed in the United States."

Senator Aiken replied: "I think it has been estimated by witnesses before the committee that . . . the Brannan plan . . . might cost approximately two billion dollars on hogs alone."

Then Senator Wherry asked about another farm product: "Does the Senator know what would be the result with reference to milk?"

Senator Aiken: "I think the cost is estimated at approximately $2,000,400,000."

Senator Aiken was careful to say that his figures were estimates. There are variable factors—the size of a crop, the price at which it might follow in the open market, and a margin of discretion left to the Secretary of Agriculture in determining the Government's "income support standard." Estimates from many sources about the amounts of subsidies under the Brannan plan vary greatly, but all are large.

ACCEPTING Senator Aiken's estimates, more than four billion dollars would be the cost to the Government as respects two crops if the Brannan plan were applied to them. And the plan as a whole contemplates similar subsidies for a number of crops, chiefly perishable ones.

Whatever would be the cost of subsidies paid under the Brannan plan on perishable crops, it is only part of the whole story. For the Brannan plan contemplates that as respects many crops, nonperishables or less so, such as grains and cotton, the existing method of price support would continue. As to these crops, the Government would continue to support the prices by practices which include buying large quantities and taking them off the market or making loans on them or otherwise.

With the Brannan plan shelved for the time being, the existing situation is this: The prices of practically all farm crops whatever, perishable or otherwise, are supported by the Government. The cost is already enormous, and it is likely to be greater, because of the extraordinary size of current crops. The expected total cost is huge.

This takes place at a time when the Government is not able to meet its expenditures. There was a deficit in the fiscal year ending last June 30 and a deficit is expected in the present fiscal year. Simultaneously there is a business recession. In this condition, whether the Government can or should continue to expend billions of dollars to support prices of farm crops is a question likely to force itself on the country.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Congress Denies GE an Umbrella

By Drew Pearson

THE IDEA of Congress repealing the law of gravity is an old joke. Nevertheless, the Senate is actually studying what laws may be needed to regulate man-made hurricanes.

The issue was brought up by General Electric, which asked Congress to exempt the company from damage suits for any wind, hail or rainstorms it may cause.

General Electric is dead serious about this. It has a contract with the Navy to conduct weather-making experiments in the mountains near Schenectady, N. Y., and wants to make sure it is not held responsible in case a bad storm is brewed.

The Navy appealed to Congress in behalf of General Electric, warning that its experiments "may cause certain weather conditions—rain, snow, hail, and even in some instances may develop hurricanes and other high windstorms."

This worried Senator Harley Kilgore, West Virginia Democrat, who called a hearing of his Judiciary subcommittee, nervously asked about the danger of starting a hurricane. Earl Dressler, meteorologist for the Office of Naval Research, explained:

"We have found that in seeding the cumulus-type cloud that causes tornadoes or thunderstorms, different results have come about. Sometimes the cloud will dissipate from the sky. So it is very possible that one of the things we may come out with is the elimination of the tornado or the elimination of hail from the country."

Relieved at this, Kilgore went on to another problem He was suspicious that General Electric might learn how to control the weather, then patent the process.

"The next thing you know," he snorted, "General Electric will have this whole thing patented, and we will pay them a royalty every time we turn around. It has been my experience with General Electric, Bell Research, Westinghouse . . . that they spend our money and then turn around and patent the results, and they soak us for it." . . . . .

"If they could break the spell of weather we have just been having, Senator, I would be willing to contribute," suggested the Navy's Capt. Chester Ward.

"I do not like to pay twice," grunted Kilgore.

Meanwhile, General Electric must go on experimenting with the weather at its own risk. Congress will not pass a law—at this session.

Forgotten Good Neighbors

DESPITE the North Atlantic Pact, former Congressman Maury Maverick found President Truman quite Mexican-minded when he called at the White House the other day.

"It looks as if you folks in Washington have your eyes so focused on Europe that you can't see south of the border," Maverick told the President. "In fact, it looks as if Mexico would have to move over to Europe in order to get any attention from the United States."

Mr. Truman listened carefully, took notes copiously. He showed surprising knowledge of things south of the border.

"I certainly agree that we can't neglect our friends in Latin America," he told Maverick, and pointed out that he personally had taken two trips to Brazil and Mexico, whereas he had been to Europe only once.

The President promised to follow up Maverick's ideas for better Mexican-American trade, including the fact that the United States now asks Mexico to kill off part of her beef cattle to control hoof-and-mouth disease, yet won't let the meat be shipped in sealed cars over United States soil to a United States port of embarkation for Europe. Maverick urged that the United States use Marshall Plan money to facilitate the sale of beef from a friendly neighbor, Mexico, rather than from an unfriendly dictatorship, Argentina. At present, United States money is financing Argentine meat shipments to Europe, while Mexican beef piles up in United States Government warehouses—due to the fact that the United States is obligated to buy Mexican beef under the hoof-and-mouth disease program.

Hot Weather Tempers

TEMPERS are as hot as the temperatures these days on Capitol Hill, with usual parliamentary politeness broken by flashes of anger.

Two sparring partners, often at each other's throats, are Senate Majority Leader Scott Lucas of Illinois and Senator Pat McCarran of Nevada, both Democrats. It's got to a point where they don't even take the trouble to expunge their heated remarks from the record.

Latest flareup was over funds for the watchdog committee supposed to keep an eye on the Marshall Plan. Created by the Republicans, the committee is now chairmanned by McCarran, and when Lucas argued that the committee was costing too much money, the Senator from Nevada flared up.

"I think it would be well," he piped, "for the Senator from Illinois to have some conception of the law before he says this committee is trying to branch out all over the world."

"I thank the able Senator from Nevada for that last contribution of his," purred Lucas, in a voice as sticky as molasses. "I well know what a distinguished lawyer he is."

"I did not ask the Senator from Illinois for that," snapped McCarran.

"I am giving it to him because I like the Senator from Nevada, and he is a great lawyer," Lucas replied sweetly. "I would not, under any circumstances, attempt to compete with the great legal ability he exercises on the floor of the Senate."

At this, the Nevadan puffed up and exploded: "The sarcasm of the Senator from Illinois . . ."

But Lucas cut him off with a sharp: "I did not yield for that!"

"The Senator was addressing me personally," squeaked McCarran. "Will he not yield?"

"I decline to yield. I hope the Senator understands it!" snapped the Majority Leader.

"I do not understand it!" yelled McCarran.

Finally, Wisconsin's Alexander Wiley, leader of the weekly worship hour for spiritual-minded Senators, broke in:

"Peace, brethren, peace!" he soothed.

Gas 'Strike' Threatened

THE NATURAL GAS lobby seems to have concluded that John L. Lewis is not the only controller of fuel who can strike. In telegrams to Congressmen, the lobby has threatened to shut off the Nation's natural gas—unless Congress passes a bill exempting independent producers from Federal regulation.

The warning was sent to members of the House Commerce Committee just before they were scheduled to meet on the bill. Signed by Richard Wagner, president of the Chicago Corp.—a holding company which holds the pursestrings of many natural gas companies—the telegram said:

"We are convinced that failure to pass (this) bill would mean hardship to consumers generally, as most producers are determined to avoid any sale in interstate commerce until the natural gas act is clarified."

This threatened strike by producers is the climax of a long, bitter struggle by the natural gas lobby against Federal regulation. The present bill, introduced by Senator Bob Kerr of Oklahoma and Congressman Oren Harris of Arkansas, is a watered down version of the famous Moore-Rizley bill which would have boosted rates. Kerr and Harris are now asking that the Federal Power Commission not be permitted to regulate producers until they deliver the gas into an interstate pipeline.

Soak Away the Heat

By Alton L. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW HAVEN, Conn.—In a heat wave, your best pal is your bathtub. A 20 to 30 minute soaking will keep you cooled down for 5 to 6 hours.

A good solid meal and light work that gives your legs a little exercise can help, too, contrary to the popular idea that you should stick to lettuce and salads and the armchair.

These hot-weather tips and the scientific reasons for them come from Dr. L. P. Herrington, director of research of the John B. Pierce Laboratory of Hygiene here and research associate professor of public health, Yale University. He is coauthor with Dr. C.-E. A. Winslow of a book, "Temperature and Human Life" (Princeton University Press), summing up 20 years of research on the problem.

Legs Are Radiators

YOU'RE comfortable when your skin temperature is about 82 degrees and your internal organs are about 98, Dr. Herrington said. In a heat wave, your skin temperature may rise to 96 and your internal temperature to 99½.

You've then got an extra head of heat. A 5-minute shower refreshes you, but doesn't do much about getting rid of the excess heat. A cool bath, for up to half an hour, draws out this heat and keeps you feeling cooler for hours.

The heavy meal with meat and potatoes can make you feel better at times, he added, if it's combined with a little leg exercise and sensible clothing. The reason is that when you're hot, more blood is pumped into your legs. They're good "radiators" for losing heat.

But this additional blood in your legs makes you a bit like a pilot pulling his plane out of a steep dive. He's subjected to several times the normal pull of gravity, and blood drains away from his brain and into his legs. In hot weather the extra blood in your legs is like being under a little more than the normal pull of gravity.

A good meal increases the circulation, and more blood goes in and out of the leg radiators.

100-Calorie Output

BEING in good physical trim is another hot-weather aid. Then your body is more efficient at perspiration, one of its main defenses against heat. The other defense is radiation.

The human body's perspiration cooler is several times as good in cooling effect as a large home refrigerator, Dr. Herrington said. The normal human being produces about 100 calories of heat an hour, and gets rid of it. In electrical energy, this would be enough juice to keep a 100-watt bulb burning each hour. When you're surrounded by hot air and hot objects, your body has even more heat to get rid of.

Don't try to beat the heat by just sitting still. Light activity is better than heavy work or desk work. Anything that makes you move your legs helps circulate the blood.

Buildings absorbs heat during a hot spell, and can stay warm for days after the outdoor temperature drops. Even a rain doesn't cool them much. If you're inside, this heat radiates to you. A fan to circulate the cool air from the outside helps.

Brain Slows Down

BUT a good part of your trouble in a heat wave may be nervous and psychological, Dr. Herrington said.

Your brain doesn't work as well, and you're more likely to make mistakes or suffer accidents than at 70 degrees. You can fight the lethargic feelings, but will pay for it if you do. Your conscience may bother you that you're not doing enough work. The best answer is work with more frequent changes of posture and a moderate amount of walking.

Ignoring the thermometer can be a real aid. Americans, at least, have a strange attachment to thermometers.

House Makes Another Pass At Poll Tax

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, Miss.—If the House of Representatives can waste two days in passing anti-poll-tax legislation, I ought to be able to waste a few paragraphs commenting on the hypocrisy, the futility and the unconstitutionality of such action.

A majority of the citizens of 42 States obviously think the poll tax, as a voting requisite, is a bad tax. Perhaps a majority of the citizens of the remaining six also think so, and in time will abandon it. I hope so.

But if the Constitution of the United States means anything—and you'll have to ask the Supreme Court, not me, if it does—the decision to change now rests with the citizens of those six States. Only a constitutional amendment can properly take away the present right of the States to set their own voting qualifications.

However, bloc votes are more important than the Constitution, so a majority of the boys in the House came across with the good old gesture last week. For the fourth time they've passed a bill outlawing the poll tax as a requisite for voting in Federal elections.

If any of them honestly believe that the Senate will concur, they ought to be barred from voting themselves on the grounds of mental instability. There isn't a chance of anti-poll-tax legislation getting by the Senate. Southern Senators would again filibuster a poll tax measure to death, and everyone in the House knows it. Filibuster is a horrible word, but it isn't as repugnant as the recurrent attempt to ramrod an unconstitutional act through Congress because it seems smart politics to do so.

And it probably is smart politics. On the one hand are six Southern poll tax States, whose total electoral vote is small and whose political behavior can usually be ascertained in advance. On the other are clamorous blocs of voters in large and politically uncertain States, to whom poll tax repeal by Federal action has been sold as a holy crusade and a politically advantageous kind of retaliation.

Inciting them—and influencing the lads who learned back in Kansas City that great machines can be built from little blocs—are honest and dishonest spokesmen for greater centralization of government as the only panacea for our democratic failures.

The poll tax is virtually meaningless in the Nation. Left to themselves, the six poll tax States will in time repeal their statutes. Or, if that appears too long to wait, certainly the citizens of 42 States would approve a constitutional amendment outlawing the poll tax in Federal elections.

But such procedure would be too orderly to produce immediate political results. Congressional repeal is the smart way, boys, so damn the Constitution and full speed ahead to the same old starting point.

Matter of Fact

The Collapse of Bipartisanship

By Joseph Alsop

THE country is now squarely confronted with the grave consequences of a development often reported in this space. Bipartisanship in American foreign policy, which saved the Western world in the postwar years, has been utterly abandoned since the last election. The results are the open opposition of Senators Arthur H. Vandenberg and John Foster Dulles to the Administration's program to arm Europe, plus the even more alarming squabble over international atomic energy policy. Worse may be expected later on.

The way bipartisanship has broken down is very simple indeed. The foundation stone of the whole system was continuous exchange of information and continuous consultation on policy, between the leaders of the Administration and the leaders of the Republicans in Congress. This was essential, because the Republicans could not and cannot be expected to go along blindly with any policy presented to them at the last minute, as an accomplished fact.

The most important exchange of information and ideas was always between the chief officials of the State Department and Senator Vandenberg, the commanding foreign affairs expert of the Republicans in the Senate. Since his return from Paris, Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson had only seen Senator Vandenberg, at least until a few days ago, at two or three purely formal and general conferences. This startling fact is sufficient proof that bipartisanship is at an end.

Connally's Sensitivity

THE excuse given for the avoidance of the man who was formerly the State Department's chief collaborator, is highly formal to say the least. Previously, it is said, Senator Vandenberg was chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, which provided a foundation for collaboration. Now, it is added, the committee chairman is Senator Tom Connally of Texas, who openly resented Vandenberg's preeminence in the past and would grow very touch now if Vandenberg and the other Republicans were still consulted.

It is certainly true that Senator Connally's sensitivity constitutes an obstacle to the continuation of bipartisanship. But what is now necessary is not at all the sort of system that prevailed when the Republicans had control of the Senate. In those days, Undersecretary of State Robert A. Lovett worked for an hour or so with Senator Vandenberg almost every afternoon. And to this remarkable and productive partnership we directly owe the Atlantic Pact and many other great achievements.

The need today, however, is only for a resumption, on a reasonable, modified plan, of the normal exchange of information and prior consultation on policy without which any bipartisanship is wholly impossible. And if Senator Connally objects to this much, his objection ought to be overruled.

The Connally objections could have been overruled long before this, of course, if the Administration had had the faintest desire to solve this problem, which is now gradually bringing American policy to a standstill. Secretary Acheson, one of the ablest men in Washington, is certainly quite clever enough to have found a solution. The question thus arises whether something deeper and more fundamental than Senator Connally's touchiness is not the cause of the present dangerous situation.

Reluctant Collaborators

ONCE this question is asked, it is only natural to look to the White House for an answer. In the time before the last election, President Truman gave an almost completely free hand to the heads of his State and Defense Departments. James F. Byrnes and George C. Marshall, Robert A. Lovett and James V. Forrestal, were the real authors of the postwar bipartisan system.

Rather early in the game, there were very clearly indications that the system had not endeared itself to President Truman and his entourage, because it clothed the Republicans with too much credit for the great achievements in the field of foreign affairs. The system was tolerated, however, although with visible distaste, until the grand election crisis.

Then, when Lovett and Forrestal maintained bipartisan consultation on foreign policy through the months of September and October before the voting, all sorts of charges of "disloyalty" were leaked out by the White House group. It is certainly not a bad bet that the present situation originated, at least in part, in the White House attitude toward bipartisanship that crystallized at that time.

Fortunately, there is still no reason why the error cannot be remedied. It is time for everyone to swallow his pride (and this includes the Republicans) and reinstitute bipartisanship in foreign affairs without further delay.

The alternative is the extension to the foreign field of our new method of domestic politics, by which the President presents a series of great measures to Congress, and then tries to make political capital out of congressional rejection of his program. Such a barren way of making foreign policy in the present world crisis, will be nothing less than playing mumbledy-peg with the fate of this country.

The Gallup Poll

Farmers Split on Brannan Plan

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

MIDWEST farmers who have followed the discussion about the controversial Brannan farm subsidy plan are evenly divided in their opinions about it, a survey reveals.

The Truman Administration is expected to lean heavily on the Brannan plan to win farm votes in 1950.

The survey was conducted among a cross-section of farmers in the East and West Central States, the cross-section being selected so as to be representative of all farmers in the two sections comprising Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, North and South Dakota.

Fewer than one-half (43 per cent) of all the farmers questioned said they had been following discussion of the Brannan Plan. These were asked:

"What is your opinion of it?"

The vote:

Favorable	18%
Unfavorable	18%
No opinion	7
	43%
Haven't followed discussion	57
	100%

The proportion of farmers familiar with the Brannan plan will undoubtedly increase sharply as the issue becomes injected into the 1950 Congressional campaign. The battle lines are forming. The plan is opposed by Allan Kline, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, who has labeled it partisan politics and an attempt to regiment and control farmers.

The Truman Administration has vigorously supported the plan, having opened the drive for its adoption at a much-publicized meeting in June at Des Moines.

Last week the House of Representatives voted down an attempt by the Administration forces to get authorization of a "trial run" of the Brannan Plan on a selected list of commodities—shorn wool, eggs and potatoes.

The plan proposes that instead of having the Government support the price of farm commodities, the farmer is to sell his products for whatever the market will bring. Then the Government will pay to the farmer the difference between the market price of a commodity and the average price for that product over a period of years. The idea is to keep farm income high while allowing consumers the benefit of lower prices for food and other farm products.

To be eligible under the plan, farmers would have to be willing to cooperate in crop control requirements when necessary and to comply with other regulations. It is this feature to which many farmers object.

They Aren't Giving Up, However

Rain Still Baffles Scientists

By Howard W. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Editor

NEW YORK.—Scientific rain-making with dry ice, now in its third summer, is still unable to make useful rain.

Control of the weather, predicted two years ago, not only is not tried, but now stands as a dangerous experiment.

The General Electric scientists who discovered the rain-making methods have gone back to their laboratories to study further the intricacies of clouds. They haven't given up, but their chief, Dr. Irving Langmuir, says:

"You can't make rain out of any old cloud, any old place, any old time."

He and his staff do believe that some useful sharpshooting for rain is going to be possible.

The United States Weather Bureau has just finished three rain-making experiments, with the same negative results that they got last summer in Ohio, when 150 attempts failed to show how to make rain of economic importance to farmers.

Use Silver Particles

ONE of these new experiments floated silver iodide particles into the air near Colfax, Calif. The particles flowed upward on the west side of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. Rain gauges were set in Donner Pass to see what effect this seeding might have.

In central California, the Weather Bureau had Air Force planes flying over clouds, dropping dry ice pellets and silver iodide particles. Similar experiments have just been concluded around Mobile, from the Mobile Air Base, with Gulf Coast cumulus clouds as targets. These are the clouds that most frequently give the most rain.

All three experiments are on the negative side, in that to date the studies show nothing startling. The search is not concluded, however, and the Weather Bureau hasn't given up. Plans are under way to work on tropical cumulus clouds and on stratus clouds next year.

The idea is that even though no dramatic discovery is made, some of the little facts gleaned may later lead to important results.

Clouds Are Complex

SCIENTIFIC rain-making has proved one new point beyond doubt, that clouds, their structure, why they rain and why they develop the power to cause disasters are a lot more intricate than had been supposed.

Dr. Langmuir is concentrating on a specific study which was tipped off by an Albuquerque, N. Mex., experiment last fall. Two cumulus clouds, hanging over mountains, were seeded with dry ice. They developed into a storm that blanketed 4000 square miles and gave one-third of a month's average rain.

The Nobel Prize winning scientist believes as a result that in mountain regions, surrounded by fairly dry areas, it may be possible to find a way to make the clouds move off the mountains and give useful rains in the nearby regions.

Rain certainly has been made by the seeding. In the Weather Bureau's experiments thus far, the amount of rain usually has not been of much value unless the seeding was done close to an area where there already was good natural rain or snow.

Frightening

NO DEFINITE admissions have been made about seeding hurricanes. Two years ago there were reports, from weather observers, that maybe hurricanes had been made worse, and that maybe one had been deflected from the sea to strike the shore with damaging force. These were unofficial. No one claimed to know for certain whether any effects were due to cloud seeding.

But one big fact is known. When the seeding strikes the right cloud, the forces that boil up are quick, immense and almost frightening.

Predictions that lightning could be stopped by seeding, and that hail could be prevented, have not been put to test.

The military forces are interested but have said nothing about any angles, except making holes in clouds to clear the air above flying fields. This dissolution of airfield clouds is the nearest to success of all the weather experiments.

Rich Michigander Slated to Head GOP Committee

By Robert S. Allen

ARTHUR SUMMERFIELD, wealthy Michigan auto dealer, has the inside track for Republican National Chairman. Likely to go in with him as deputy chairman is A. T. Howard, Scottsbluff, Nebr., businessman.

The National Committee meets in Washington Thursday to name a successor to Representative Hugh Scott (Pa.), who recently resigned the chairmanship under pressure. Summerfield is a National Committeeman and has long been a party fund-raiser.

The Summerfield-Howard slate is a compromise that is acceptable to the major factions.

Howard was agreed to on the insistence of Senator Kenneth Wherry (Neb.), Republican Floor Leader. He demanded that the chairmanship go to a Westerner. Other party leaders balked at giving the post to a Wherry lieutenant. The problem was solved by creating the job of deputy chairman and giving it to Howard.

Curiously, the only hitch to this deal would be a surprise move to keep Scott as chairman. Summerfield-Howard supporters say such a move is on foot. Scott's powerful Pennsylvania backers are reported secretly trying to line up support to reject his resignation and keep him in office.

Wadleigh Warned of 'Red' Gossip

—"Once Carl took me to a Chinese restaurant and ordered the meal from a menu printed in Chinese characters."

selves any airs. I was tactless, sometimes irritable, and sometimes intellectually arrogant. I now believe that much of my difficulty was due to an unconscious feeling of guilt.

The most exasperating difficulties of all were those I had in concealing my political views so that my underground activities would not be suspected. It was easy enough, of course, simply to refrain from direct expressions of approval of the Communists. But I was constantly slipping into the error of making comments on events that betrayed a strongly leftist slant.

In some cases, I probably betrayed my sympathies by facial expression or tone of voice. It had always been my habit, in line with my general practice of outspokenness, to let my face reveal my feelings. The art of the poker face was one in which I had had no practice. Now I found myself in a situation where I needed a poker face, not just in certain situations for which I could prepare myself, but in the most casual conversations at any time.

In short, I was in a dangerous business.

Branded a Red

IT WAS not long before Carl told me of a conversation about "Reds" that had taken place in some Washington social gathering. One of those present had mentioned me as being a "Red." Carl even told me the name of the person who made this remark. It was one of my colleagues in the Trade Agreements Division.

After that I made a really serious effort to cultivate the art of commenting on events without revealing any slant or point of view. To go further than that, and actually express views different from my own, was too distasteful for me to attempt.

Even later, Carl must have had some reason to believe that I was talking too freely. I think it was some time around the middle of 1937 that he brought up the subject once more, and said: "I think you would do well to let it be thought around the State Department that your views are shifting gradually to the right."

During 1936 I felt that I was doing quite well in getting documents to Harold. Although none of the material that came my way revealed anything of sensational importance, nearly all of the reports on economic developments and conditions in Germany, Japan and other countries came to my desk.

At the end of the year my associates in the espionage network gave me a fairly large Bokhara rug as a New Year's present. I was told it was "a gift from the peoples of the USSR," or something to that effect.

A picturesque little piece of hocus-pocus, I thought, but not really deceitful hocus-pocus; for obviously some official in Moscow had decided to do this. There was no doubt in my mind that the rug had been sent from "on the other side," to quote a phrase often used by Harold to denote Russia. I felt flattered to think that my contribution had been found valuable enough to merit such attention.

Recently I learned from testimony by Whittaker Chambers that the rug was bought in New York on the orders of the mysterious Colonel Bykov, who was on this side at the time. That made me feel that I had been taken for a ride.

Reports Thin Out

THE year 1937 was discouraging. The reports coming to the Trade Agreements Division seemed to be having more and more of the interesting material weeded out of them. More and more often, when the time came to meet Harold or Carl, I would have nothing on my desk that seemed worth taking to them. Then, looking back over the whole period I had done this work, I began to wonder whether the results were worth the effort.

It seemed to me that if I were to spend my time sitting in a library reading the appropriate German publications, I could produce material that would be more valuable than the economic reports coming into the State Department from Germany itself. Certainly, there was very little in these reports that could not be obtained from publications, and much that was in publications was not in these reports.

About the time when I was first beginning to have those doubts, I was offered a position in a university. It was a very good offer for a person whose work for the doctorate was not finished. I wanted to accept it. It had always been my intention to get into academic work after some years of experience in Government.

I discussed the matter with Harold, and he assured me that I was extremely valuable as a source, much too valuable to lose. Little scraps of information that might seem insignificant to me, he said, could be put together with scraps from other sources to reveal something really important. He added that this was only a beginning, and that if I remained in the department I would sooner or later have access to far richer material.

I talked to Carl also, and he, too, was eager for me to stay.

It seemed to me that they were in a better position to judge than I. Also, I was inclined to mistrust my own judgment because I might be biased in favor of a safe position. I felt like a soldier who has volunteered to fight and then begs to be sent home after a brief experience in the front lines. And so I turned down the university position.

One-Armed 'Boss'

IT WAS near the end of 1937 that Carl introduced me to a person who was later to become the subject of puzzled speculation. At one of our meetings Carl told me that he was going to introduce me to "the boss." I gathered that this was the head of our appartus. Carl referred to him by the name of Sasha. Naturally, I felt pleased.

Shortly afterward I was introduced to Sasha on a street corner somewhere in the Northeast part of Washington. I held out my hand in the usual manner, and then suddenly noticed that the right sleeve of his coat was hanging loose. Sasha had no right arm.

After the introduction we went to a restaurant for dinner. Sasha, who spoke English well, but with a distinct Russian accent, lost no time in getting down to business. The people in Moscow, he told me, were not satisfied with the material I was turning in. They believed that a man who had access to what they had received from me must also have access to many other valuable documents which I had not delivered.

In short, they suspected me of holding back a considerable part of the available material.

I assured Sasha that I was not holding anything back, and tried to explain the situation.

Then it occurred to me that, knowing next to nothing about the way my material was being used by them, I must often make mistakes in my own selections from the material available to me. I said: "Perhaps I don't really understand enough about what kind of material you want. Can you tell me something about that?"

"We want everything," he replied, "that bears on the preparations the Germans and Japanese are making for war against us." He said this with an air of finality, as if it were a complete answer to my question.

Well, I thought, that tells me nothing I didn't know before. However, I felt that I had impressed Sasha with my sincerity, and was sure he would report back that there was no reason to suspect me of deliberately withholding anything.

Complete Surprise

MY LAST delivery of State Department documents to the Soviet network in Washington was made sometime early in 1938, shortly after Carl, or Chambers, introduced me to Sasha. I had no idea at the time that my work for the "cause" was coming to a sudden end.

I had served the network efficiently for about two years. There had been no slip-up, as far as I knew, and the wind-up of my double life was a complete surprise when it came.

In March of 1938 I was sent on a trip to Turkey to help make a trade agreement with the Turks. I asked Harold, just before leaving, whether there was anything useful that I could do while I was away. He replied: "Nothing special. Just keep your eyes and ears open." So the Turkish trip included no underground activities.

I returned just in time to celebrate the New Year in New York. It was the beginning of the ominous year 1939.

I had not been back in the office many days when Carl phoned me to make a dinner date, or perhaps a lunch date; the news he broke to me on that occasion was so shocking that I am unable to remember the circumstances.

As nearly as I can remember, he told me two or three times that he had left the apparatus and the party. I couldn't believe my ears.

Here was Chambers' story:

The authorities in Moscow were convinced that he had become a Trotskyist and that he had converted me to Trotskyism. They had ordered him to return to Moscow, clearly with the intention of executing him when he arrived, as he told it.

"I sat through many a night," Chambers said, "talking it over with Sasha."

What! Sasha, too? But I was already so shocked that this made little further impression on me.

"We considered all kinds of plans and ideas," he went on, "a lot of crazy ideas. At one time we thought of going to Spain and volunteering to fight. But that was absurd. They would have found out who we were soon enough, and we would have been executed on the spot."

Fear of Chambers

I MUST have been almost speechless with horror as I listened to his strange tale. I realized that my underground work in the State Department was almost certainly ended, and I feared that Chambers, embittered as he was, might go to the authorities and tell them of my activities.

Knowing that I could no longer trust this man, I feared him.

Nevertheless, I think that my strongest feeling, as I listened, was pity. His will to live had come into conflict with his loyalty to a cause for which he had been ready to make almost any sacrifice. It was not hard to picture the ghastly mental tortures, the long weeks of indecision, and finally the feelings of disillusionment and shame with which he concluded that only one thing was possible—to become a deserter.

When we parted, Chambers said: "Well, now I'm going to become a bourgeois." Then, patting me on the shoulder, he added: "That's what you'll have to do, too."

I made no comment. I just said goodby.

I wondered what to make of it all. Had the hysteria developed in the Russian purge of 1937 stretched a long arm across the ocean and tried to seize Chambers as one of its victims? Or had it been just a figment of his imagination that they considered him disloyal? Or had his loyalty really wavered?

Looking back, I could see many signs of misgivings and doubts in some things he had said to me before I went to Turkey. He had brooded over the Spanish tragedy. Of course, I, too, had been saddened and shocked by it, but I had supposed that the discontinuance of Russian help to the republic was unavoidable. Chambers apparently had considered it a betrayal.

Looking back, I thought there had been a change in Chambers' demeanor during the last months before my trip. His air of authority, his I-know-all-the-tricks-of-this-game manner had melted away. I had not noticed it then because it was gradual. I had merely thought that he grew more likable on closer acquaintance.

If I weren't so naive, so instinctively trustful of other people, I reflected, I'd have suspected that something was wrong. Well, that's water over the dam, I reflected. Now I must get in touch with Harold and warn him that Chambers couldn't be trusted any more.

NEXT SUNDAY: Wadleigh tries to warn "Harold," his original contact, of Chambers' defection, but even his friend, Jane B., can't find Harold. Then Wadleigh gets a hysterical phone call from Chambers, asking Wadleigh to meet him on Jackson pl. Chambers tells Wadleigh that someone is writing an expose of the whole system for the Saturday Evening Post, and Wadleigh passes on this information to Jane B. She is greatly alarmed, and attempts to get in touch with the working spies to warn them, but the apparatus has vanished.

The Magazine Rack

By Philip Orme

AN ARMY of unremunerated enthusiasts climbed every stair, banged every door in New York's populous Twentieth Congressional District throughout the month preceding the balloting for a successor to the late Representative Sol Bloom.

The canvassers reported to Franklin Delano Roosevelt, jr., four days before the special election of May 17 that there were 40,000 "sure" votes coming up for him and the Liberal and Four Freedoms Party.

The total for FDR, jr., after the smoke of battle had cleared: 41,146—a 16,794 plurality over Tammany's Shalleck. No confused experting here!

The son of the man four times elevated to the Presidency tells in Collier's about inside shenanigans in that tough New York struggle. "How We Won" is the story, as Napoleon's victories were the story, of organization down to the minutest detail. No move was overlooked that might checkmate real or fancied underground tactics of a determined opposition.

For a political neophyte (maybe!) commanding electioneering babes (perhaps!), "Junior," as he was dubbed by friend and foe alike, showed marvelous canniness. And so did his tireless myrmidons. His yarn is particularly refreshing because the campaigns of all contestants seem to have been conducted with a care to keep those punches pretty well up. That's notable in a Manhattan district.

HEMINGWAY'S Macomber turned tail shamelessly when a lion charged, though armed with a murderously high-powered rifle and flanked by one of the best guides in Africa. What would that fictional worthy have done if given only a long-bladed spear to stop baleful and bounding Simba?

Yet, year in, year out, Hugh Prior tells us in Field and Stream, the nomadic tribes of Kenya take the fight to the great cats with such a weapon, unchanged in form from that their ancestors wielded centuries ago.

The Nandi, the Lumbwa, particularly the Masai started challenging Leo in order to protect their herds, but the engagements have grown ritualistic. While as many as 60 natives take part in peril-fraught sorties through the towering grass of the veldt, not a man among them flinches from the rush of the maned fury.

"Jungle Gladiators," Prior calls his article, and how far superior seem these chanting warriors to the mercenaries of the Roman arena.

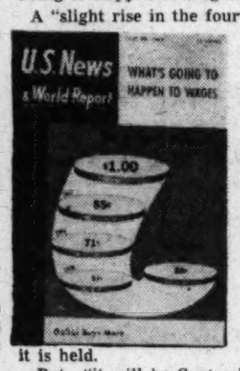
"THIS YEAR 5-10 cents, maybe nothing in 1950." So the U. S. News and World Report summates its lead article, "What's Going to Happen to Wages."



A "slight rise in the fourth round" during the remainder of 1949, it is predicted, will be selective. "Increases, where given, will be confined to wage earners in organized industries where strong union leadership is in a position to force concessions, with some political help."

Officials take it about for granted, the article maintains, that the Presidential fact-finding board in the steel impasse will "come up with an increase of between 5 and 10 cents." If steel agrees, it is added, then autos, other than General Motors, "probably will be forced to make a small raise" and coal "will find it difficult to avoid a new concession to John L. Lewis. "Oil and electric equipment may fall in line, it is held.

But—"it will be September at the earliest before the 1949 argument is settled. A fifth round for 1950 then will become highly improbable."

The weekly notes in "Dollar Buys a Little More" that it's very little more, indeed. After six months of deflation, it's still only a 59-cent dollar, and at the height of inflation it was 57.

EMILY POST has hit the road, via Woman's Life. "Bad Manners on the Highway Are Murder," she forthrightly titles her lecture on correct boulevard behavior. The driver always in a hurry, the man who eggs the hacker on so he can make his appointment, the suburbanite who whirls downtown in a big city without knowing the traffic rules, the man—or woman—behind the wheel who's drowsy from drinking—these, and many more, are guilty of grave social faux pas . . . And, besides, they may kill you.

T. STEPHANIDES, Greek doctor practicing in Paris, has connected a long list of folk remedies employed by peasants in his native land. He thinks, according to Pathfinder, which had been looking over the Lancet, British medical review, that more attention should be paid these homely concoctions. A sample:

"For bee, wasp and hornet stings, take an onion or a head of garlic, cut it in two, and place one of the halves over the sting. To stop any form of hemorrhage, swallow some octopus eggs, roasted and powdered in a glass of water."

...But Hardly Balanced Reporting

Sheean's Magnificent Testament

By Sterling North

LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT: Gandhi and the Way to Peace. By Vincent Sheean. Random House. 374 pp. $3.75.

VINCENT (Jimmy) SHEEAN was within 10 feet of Mahatma Gandhi when the assassin's bullets made India's great leader a martyr. Short of being present when Socrates drank the hemlock or when Christ was crucified, such a coincidence would seem to offer a philosophical reporter the greatest newsbeat of its sort in the last two or three thousand years.

VINCENT SHEEAN

But Jimmy's reaction was curious. He did not try to see or ascertain the identity of the assassin. He did not race for a cable-end or a typewriter.

Instead he partially doubled over, felt a roaring like a storm at sea in his head, felt "a burning and stinging in the fingers of my right hand and a similar burning and stinging in my eyes." He developed large psychosomatic blisters on two of his fingers, went through a mystical agony at the departure of Gandhi's spirit, and wandered about the garden for at least two hours in a state of semi-consciouness.

No wonder Jimmy, despite his great erudition, charm, world-wide experience, distinguished prose style and general brilliance, has frequently driven editors to despair. Almost any other correspondent covering such a story who was knocked out for a week by the occurrence and then began writing about his own religious conversion, would be fired on the spot.

But Jimmy is no ordinary correspondent. Back in Vermont he had been having dreams about the inevitability of Gandhi's forthcoming martyrdom. He had come all the way to India to be of aid, if possible, in preventing such a tragedy. And he had been sitting at Gandhi's feet like a disciple asking questions about the Bhagavad Gita, about Gandhi's religion of non-violence and about other spiritual problems, for two of the three days preceding Gandhi's death.

He was so certain that Gandhi would be assassinated that he had written his editor at Holiday magazine a letter received in America a day before the tragedy occurred, confidently predicting the martyrdom.

Materialistic westerners can explain this as they will. To Sheean this was another Passion Week, the last days of a demi-god. And he has written "Lead, Kindly Light" as though he were a one-man Matthew-Mark-Luke-and-John.

Excellent Biography

I FIND MYSELF both deeply moved and slightly repulsed by the book.

On one level it is an excellent short biography of Gandhi, tracing all of his major beliefs, including vegetarianism, fasting and nonviolence, back to his childhood. It shows the influence of Tolstoy, Ruskin, Thoreau, the Koran and particularly the Christian New Testament on Gandhi's thinking, and delves as deeply as a westerner can into Gandhi's interpretation of the Bhagavad Gita and other Hindu scriptures.

Moreover, despite the highly emotionalized, highly personalized approach, the book gives a vivid, unforgettable picture of both the assassination and the consigning of Gandhi's ashes to the sacred rivers.

But a close analysis of the words of Gandhi, taken down by Sheean in a sort of reverent trance during at least two long conversations with the Mahatma, scarcely make the pronouncements seem the holy writ that Jimmy thinks they are.

And it is slightly annoying to find Sheean at least partially defending the caste system, cow worship and other ancient religious shackles which have helped India remain the most dirty, diseased, overpopulated, superstitious nation on the face of the planet.

"Lead, Kindly Light" is, in part, a profoundly moving book. As the climax of Sheean's own spiritual pilgrimage, which began with his "Personal History" many years ago, this testament is magnificent. But I can scarcely recommend it as balanced reporting.

Part of a Trend

VINCENT SHEEAN'S "Lead, Kindly Light" will move rapidly to a position high on the nonfiction best seller list. This would have been true even if it had not been a selection of the Book-of-the-Month Club. American readers seem to be hungry for religious certainty and spiritual leadership.

The tremendous sale of such books as "Quo Vadis," "Ben Hur," and "In His Steps" were understandable in the light of Victorian fundamentalism. But how are we to explain such recent successes as the novels of Lloyd C. Douglas, Liebman's "Peace of Mind," Oursler's "The Greatest Story Ever Told," Merton's "The Seven Storey Mountain," Sheen's "Peace of Soul," Peale's "A Guide to Confident Living' and half a dozen other extended sermons?

Europeans receiving our bounty by the billions may continue to call us materialistic money-grabbers. But how can they explain the fact that on current American best-seller lists, two novels and six non-fiction titles are on religious themes?

Actually we are a religious people. At least we practice Christian charity, sometimes disguised as intelligent self-interest. As Churchill has pointed out, no other great nation has ever been so generous with financial aid to its stricken neighbors. And those of us who continue to cherish elements of our scientific skepticism are yet increasingly aware that materialism is not enough, and that the science which has given us the atom bomb and bacteriological warfare may eventually destroy the human race.

Like Vincent Sheean, most of us are groping for some faith, some code of ethics which will reestablish human dignity. Maybe Gandhi offers the answer. Certainly non-resistance (if we can also teach it to the Russians) would abolish war. "Lead, Kindly Light" may point the way. At least it offers provocative food for contemplation.

Mafia in League With 'Have' Classes

liberation from the Spaniards by Giuseppe Garibaldi and the unification of Italy, and wrote:

"The Sicilian society is ordered to the exclusive advantage of the 'have' classes and those with whom they share their power, the Mafia. The dominant classes are obliged to protect these malefactors who, in turn, protect them.

"A mystic force seems to guard the mafiosi, particularly from the public authorities who search vainly for assassins and delinquents known to all, but whom none will identify. Thus, while carabinieri patrol the hinterlands for criminals, the bandits themselves may be in Palermo, and not always in hiding."

Sicilian children will endure torture and not betray a mafioso. A Sicilian needs only to be known as a member of the Mafia to command fear and respect.

Intimidates the Unions

THE most recent investigation of the activities of the organization which provided the pattern for gangsterism in our own country, as well as many of the hoods and grifters themselves, was by Gen. Pietro Branca, commander of carabinieri, two years ago.

"The Mafia," he found, "is an organization whose tentacles reach into every stratum of the Sicilian society with the exclusive object of enriching themselves at the expense of others. It has reconstituted its families of adherents in Palermo, Trapani, Caltanisetta, Enna and Agrigento.

"The Mafia obliges landowners to take on employes of its own choosing. It succeeds in obliging landholders to give up lands and other agricultural enterprises to mafiosi henchmen and in influencing public affairs, intimidating trade unionists and threatening the lives of all who desire establishment of law and order."

Why has not Scelba caught Giuliano in weeks and months of what amounts to a military campaign in the region of Montelepre? Because Giuliano is protected by the Mafia and its bloodcode of secrecy—and because Scelba is fighting something bigger than a man and a gang. He is fighting something that has become a political power—the Mafia.

And if the charges of the left are true, Scelba, a Christian Democrat, must be hunting his man with mingled emotions. According to the outspoken Communists, at least, the Christian Democrats solicited Giuliano's aid in the island elections in 1947 and the national voting in 1948. Giuliano is said to own documents proving such solicitation, but it is probably merely a coincidence that the bandit's home town, Montelepre, turned in a heavy majority for the government's party a year ago last April.

The Portella Massacre

THERE is some evidence, more tenable than mere Communist charges, that Giuliano and the Mafia are allied with the barons to attempt to destroy left-wing opposition on the island and with it stifle land reforms.

On May 1, 1947, soon after the Sicilian electorate had returned to the island's assembly many left-wingers pledged to agrarian reform, a Communist mass meeting was attacked by bandits with machine guns and hand grenades. More than 60 persons, many of them women and children, were killed in the public square of Portella della Ginestra.

Scelba publicly declared that the outrage had no political significance and that Giuliano was responsible. A roundup of mafiosi followed. Seventeen alleged members of Giuliano's band were arrested after a running fight with police in which three bandits were killed. Some 44 members of the Mafia were eventually tried.

Among the documents introduced at the trial was a deposition from one of the prisoners quoting Giuliano as having said:

"We must act against the Communists. On May 1 we shall shoot up Portella. Then we will all be free."

The statement was allegedly made a few days before the Portella massacre and was reportedly based on a "pledge" of freedom for Giuliano and his gangsters in return for political services rendered. Who made the "pledge" was not specified.

It is not to be imagined that such a promise ever was made by the government. But no progressively minded Sicilian, and there are many, doubts that Giuliano and the Mafia are being used by the landowners to crush the peasants' campaign for agrarian reforms.

Already some big estates have been broken up and their acres turned over to farmers' cooperatives. Unless the process is halted, the baroni may disappear as a class, and there is nothing a baron likes less than to yield his lands and prerogatives.

$14,000 Payoff Reported

AT THE trial of the 44, some testified that, to their knowledge, Giuliano received eight million lire, about $14,000, for the Portella job. The witnesses complained that they all received inadequate shares.

Later Giuliano, or someone interested in perpetuating the notion of his personal responsibility rather than the Mafia's, wrote a letter to Sicilian newspapers announcing that he had declared war against all Communists.

It was not until Giuliano turned again from political activities to murder, robbery and kidnaping, however, that the government, under pressure from public opinion, sent its small army to Sicily after April, 1948, elections.

Battles between carabinieri and bandits occur almost daily. Police patrols are ambushed on mountain roads and trails. Last July 3, while a police vehicle crawled along the road from Palermo to Montelpre, it encountered enfilading machine-gun fire. Five police were killed and two wounded.

No one close to Scelba dares estimate how long it might take the Minister to subdue Giuliano or whoever is staining the Sicilian soil with blood. It is generally agreed, however, that success or failure may mean Scelba's continuance in office or his resignation, with resultant prestige or discredit to Premier de Gasperi's regime.

Scelba's men have occupied Montelepre and arrested Giuliano's entire family, including his mother. They patrol an area within a radius of 50 miles of Palermo. But even Scelba's sharpest-eyed lieutenants might might never find Giuliano.

Giuliano might be the man sitting at a Palermitan cafe, sipping coffee and reading the Rome newspapers, or the bustling little man in soiled white linens clambering onto the bus as it pulls out of Quattro Camini, Palermo's main square.

Exile From Brooklyn

THERE is a story wtihin a story, too. One of Sicily's most notorious "exports," Signor Salvatore Lucania, alias Charles Lucky Luciano, has been condemned by the government to at least temporary exile to his native village of Lercara Friddi. There Signor Lucania, alias Luciano, will miss the porcelain plumbing and other amenities of Chicago, New York and, more recently, Rome.

The police could not pin a recent recrudescence of the dope traffic in Italy on the Brooklyn bad boy. But they thought it prudent to stash him away for a while, anyhow. Sicilian Scelba chose or Sicilian Lucania's exile Lercara Friddi, which is hardly a spa and which is in the Province of Palermo, only a good long walk from Montelepre, in the heart of Giuliano territory.

Has the fabled luck of Signor Lucania, alias Luciano, at last run out? Or will he make a deal with Giuliano—or with the cops to use his influence with his Mafia friends to turn Giuliano in?

Folger Busy Despite July Doldrums

SUMMER is no lazy time at the Folger Shakespeare Library, a recent meeting there disclosed.

A round table discussion of research being carried on at the library revealed no less than eight professors of English working on books.

Kathrine Koller, University of Rochester, N. Y., is studying the English literary concepts of death between the years 1490 and 1651 in an attempt to show the relationship between literature and the growth of codes of moral and social conduct.

Carmen Rogers, Florida State University, Tallahassee, is studying melancholy in the English Renaissance and will attempt to prove that Renaissance health principles and concepts of mental therapy in some respects may have been more advanced than those today.

Cesar L. Barber, Amherst College, is studying traditional Elizabethan holidays and their relationship to Shakespeare's manner of dramatizing pleasure.

Virgil B. Heltzel, Northwestern University, is completing a book on literary patronage in England from about 1550 to 1630.

William R. Mueller, Santa Barbara College of the University of California, is studying Robert Burton's treatment of melancholy in "The Anafomy of Melancholy."

John Harold Wilson, Ohio State University, is studying Restoration acting and stage business.

Dougald MacMillan, University of North Carolina, is carrying on preliminary investigations for an edition of the plays of John Dryden. The work will form a part of the William Andrews Clark Memorial edition of the complete work of that writer.

William Haller, Barnard College, Columbia University, is preparing a history of revolutionary discussion in the period of the Puritan revolution. The book will give the history of the argument over liberty and order in the State and religion in the time of John Milton and Oliver Cromwell.

Ivor Brown, British scholar and critic whose biography of Shakespeare now has been published in this country

In a Nutshell

SHAKESPEARE. By Ivor Brown. Doubleday. $4.

"EVERY MAN fights for his own Shakespeare," says Brown, and he presents his, a full-bodied, individual and credible person, on the evidence of the Bard's poetry and drama. He writes on the assumption that there is no less autobiographical material in Shakespeare's works than in those of lesser creators. For instance, there are five shipwrecks in the plays, and for a time Shakespeare is supposed to have been a seafarer. Coming from litigious Stratford, and with some first-hand knowledge of butchering, he frequently uses legal expressions and in his early works makes several references to butchering. The "W. H." of the sonnets, Brown suspects, was not Henry Wriothesley, young Earl of Southampton, but the young man's stepfather, Sir William Harvey. This is a lively study which helps restore precious mortality to an immortal.

MIRACLE AT CARDENRIGG, by Tom Hanlin. Random House. $3.

A SCOTCH mining village in the '20s provides the setting for an Irish Bernadette's yearnings for sainthood. The 200 miners trapped and facing death by drowning in Cardenrigg Pit are more convincing than either the self-martyred central character or the miracle she brings about at the gate of the mine. The author, a Scotch miner himself, portrays the coal pit disaster with realism, but he handles the stream of consciousness and the flashback heavily and awkwardly, so that the novel comes out as an amateurish attempt.

WORLD FULL OF STRANGERS, by David Alman. Doubleday. $3.

JOHN GUSS goes into the Army from a public welfare job. Home on furlough, and in officer's uniform, he seduced Christine, one of his former welfare clients. But Christine is in love with Tony, who comes home from the Army to find that she has a baby. His relatives and friends nag him to give up the girl because of her one lapse; his many lapses don't count. John Guss, meanwhile, also comes home, and joins the police force because he can earn more money. Then he begins to kick the underdog, instead of feeding him, and cuts himself in for a lot of graft. Tony and Christine finally meet, but because they are inarticulate they never quite talk through their problem. There is some heart-rending tragedy in this novel, despite an occasional tendency to overdramatize.

INHERIT THE NIGHT. By Robert Christie. Farrar, Straus. $3.

THE mysterious Kurt Werden arrives in a sleepy little town high in the Andes with a forged United States passport, an automatic and a temper. He induces the village drunkard to guide him to San Cobar, a village so high in the Andes that it is almost literally out of this world. The priest sees the stranger emerging from the pass, and calls it a miracle. It is certainly not a miracle from heaven, for Werden is a kind of sinister knowledge set down in a completely innocent, idyllic community. For the first time, men challenge the priest's leadership, doubt their wives, mistrust one another. Christie develops this idea carefully into an absorbing novel. You begin to wonder whether Werden is simply a Hitler who escaped, or is really the original serpent in Eden.

O. HENRY: THE MAN AND HIS WORK, by E. Hudson Long. University of Pennsylvania Press. $2.75.

THIS biography of William Sydney Porter, who himself was "The Voice of the City," demonstrates how little is really known about the short life and very brief literary career of O. Henry. Long has traced his wanderings, from his native North Carolina to a Texas ranch, into Latin American exile and back to New Orleans and finally New York, after a three-year stopover in the Ohio State Penitentiary. But there are many gaps in Porter's intinerary, and only occasionally does Long succeed in breathing life into his subject. Long has done the best job yet, however, at describing and explaining the bank embezzlement which sent Porter to prison and thereby pinned him down to serious writing, and the marriage which was part and parcel of that episode.

Shakespeare Annual Offers Stage Review

SHAKESPEARE SURVEY, 2. Edited by Allardyce Nicoll. Cambridge University Press. 163 pp. Ill. $3.75.

THE second handsome quarto volume of the "Shakespeare Survey" amply upholds the standards set by the first volume last year in this praiseworthy annual publication.

Among the discussions of Shakespearian production is a 50-year stage review by M. St. Clare Byrne that should be of interest to many, and a report on "Shakespeare in New York, 1947-48," by Rosamond Gilder, that says with painful humor, "the incidence of professional productions here has risen 100 per cent, but truth compels me to admit that this represents an increase to two productions in contrast to one last year." The most recent productions were Katharine Cornell's "Antony and Cleopatra" and Theatre Inc.'s "Macbeth."

In "Shakespeare in France," Henri Fluchere reviews attitudes toward—and productions of—the Bard from 1900 to 1948, recalling when he was a subject of controversy between classicists and romanticists. The probable but not positively established handwriting of Shakespeare in "The Booke of Sir Thomas More," a manuscript of an Elizabethan play in the British Museum, is discussed by R. C. Bald.

Leslie Hotson, of Arlington, Va., gives new light on a grandiose scheme to establish an amphitheater, or arena, in or near London—an idea conceived shortly after Shakespeare's death, and Dr. James G. McManaway of the Folger Shakespeare Library reviews textual criticism of the Bard's work.—L.G.

U. S.-Israel Links Traced Over Century

THE REALITIES OF AMERICAN-PALESTINE RELATIONS by Frank E. Manuel. Public Affairs Press, Washington. $5.

AMERICA'S concern with Palestine goes back to the middle of the nineteenth century, Professor Manuel of Brandeis University points out in this review of American humanitarian and commercial activity, which finally gave the Holy Land a major place in United States foreign policy.

His book is primarily a history, both of United States-Palestine relations and of Zionism itself, and is crammed with facts and quotations drawn from State Department documents, diaries and speeches of principals, state papers of other nations and information of his own.

There is a chapter on the early American settlers in Palestine, and another on Turkey's role and the part played by Ambassador Oscar Strauss. American intervention to protect the colony in World War I is described, and the author notes the State Department resistance to President Wilson's views on Zionism. The Balfour Declaration and the convention to establish a mandate over Palestine come in for considerable attention, of course, and Standard Oil's interest in the Negev is brought out.

It is in his last chapter, however, "The Changeling Policy," that Professor Manuel comes to grips with American foreign policy. He traces this vacillation back to 1920 and carries it with mounting intensity through the about-face on the United Nations partition plan. And, finally, he excoriates the War Department for its "erroneous estimate of Arab military might," which, he says, "was in no small measure responsible for the original outbreak of the Palestine war."

"In a sense," he says, "we created and gave life to the Arab bogey around which we constructed our Middle Eastern policy."

This book is valuable reading for the student of diplomacy, but it will be heavy going for the layman who has no background knowledge of Palestinian affairs.

Taylor Caldwell Understands Brats

400-Odd Pages of Ruthlessness

LET LOVE COME LAST. By Taylor Caldwell. Scribners. 408 pp. $3.

"WORSE, he is a thief on a small scale, a little mean liar and rascal. Had he been a big thief, a prodigious liar, a great scoundrel, one might almost admire him."

TAYLOR CALDWELL

Thus speaks William Prescott, the great scoundrel of this novel, describing his erstwhile employer, Chauncey Arnold, whom he robs and ruins.

And thus, I fear, speaks Taylor Caldwell, whose books, like so many novels by women, show an only faintly disguised worship of all swashbuckling, ruthless, half-savage males.

Despite the fact that this book deals with businessmen whom she herself describes as tigers and bears, and children who are insufferable brats, it is probably the best of the many of the Caldwell melodramas to be published since "Dynasty of Death," which concerned equally ruthless munitioneers.

This is a sure-fire, top-of-the-list best seller for the following reasons:

It is what I call a "big house formula" novel, describing in minute detail one of the most prodigious, gaudy and tasteless monstrosities of the late nineteenth century. Female covetousness is thus aroused.

It deals with a brutal, iron-willed robber baron and his demure and submissively feminine wife. (Evidently most women who read this sort of novel don't want equality. They want to be dominated.)

It is set in the late nineteenth century, when fantastic fortunes could be made and no one had to pay an income tax. Thus it will inspire nostalgia.

It is highly dramatic: William Prescott, up from poverty, conspires to ruin the lumber baron, Chauncey Arnold, by whom he is employed. Chauncey Arnold's son, Eugene, in league with two of Prescott's own vicious children, conspire in turn to ruin Prescott. Thus the arena is always full of snarling lions leaping at each other's throats.

It shows most human beings in the worst possible light. Thus it will be credited with being "realistic."

Finally, it achieves a more-or-less happy ending with a more-or-less moral "moral," thus justifying the author and the reader, both of whom have been reveling in the human viciousness displayed for more than 400 pages.

The Worst Villainy

THERE is no doubt, however, that Taylor Caldwell can tell a story. From the moment William Prescott, the self-made hero-villain of this piece, proposes prosaically to gently born Ursula (circa 1879 in Andersburg, Pa.) fate moves these pawns as in some Greek drama.

Prescott wants money, power, children and social position. He gets the first three and a small taste of the fourth.

It is in the case of the children that he proves to be the worst villain while striving to be the kindest and most generous of fathers. And it is in the handling of this important part of the book that Taylor Caldwell achieves her first real stature as a novelist and psychologist.

Caldwell can understand and excuse big brats like William Prescott's spoiled children. With America swarming with spoiled children (see a recent issue of Life magazine on Hollywood's little terrors) she has come to grips with what may be our most important social problem, since it affects the entire rising generation.

Ursula is not allowed to discipline her children. William was disciplined and it displeased him. So we find the conniving eldest daughter, Julia, after a pampered, utterly selfish childhood, plotting with her husband Eugene Arnold to ruin her own father.

We find Thomas, who had always enjoyed smashing beautiful things, insulting guests to their faces and otherwise making himself obnoxious, eager to aid in the same plot.

Thomas' twin brother, Matthew, is another sort of mess: an esthetic introvert who has made such a complete retreat from reality that no one can pierce the fog.

Barbara, the youngest daughter, and Oliver, the adopted son, are the only children who turn out to be reasonably civilized, thoughtful, decent human beings. And they are the only hope of Ursula when William is finally gathered to his Neanderthalic ancestors.

A Lesson for the Doting

THE "now-dear-don't-shoot-your-little-playmates" form of "progressive" education and discipline gets the swift uppercut it so richly deserves. I can think of a dozen pairs of dizzy and doting parents who should be sent gift copies of this book with certain paragraphs underlined for emphasis.

"Let Love Come Last" is an ugly but fascinating book which holds its pace throughout most of the 400-odd pages. Toward the end the author has a tendency to let her characters make speeches. Even so, the chief protagonists remain in character: well-drawn, strong and thoroughly unlovable. A good snarling cross-section of a certain segment of society.

"Genghis Khan appeals to me tremendously," Taylor Caldwell wrote recently, "because he was a man who believed that power was the only desirable thing in life (and discovered very much later that it has no real significance and cannot satisfy deep emotional needs of humanity)."

There in a nutshell is plot and moral postscript to "Let Love Come Last." It is also the plot and postscript to dozens of thick romantic novels, mostly by women who have sanctified the Rhett Butlers ("Gone With the Wind"), Hercules and Matt Floods ("The Sun Is My Undoing") and other criminals, slave traders and mass murderers down the centuries.

Marguerite Steen, incidentally, goes on with the saga of Floods in a 782-page opus called "Twilight on the Floods" (Doubleday) just published. Her principal character this time is Johnny Flood, great-grandson of old Matt, who seeks to expiate the sins committed by his ancestors on the Gold Coast (which means, of course, that the author is seeking to expiate her sins for glorifying such creatures).

I would not be surprised to find Hitler and Mussolini and Stalin made into romantic male leads in 3-pound novels within a very few years. Power! That's the password. Ruthlessness! Genghis Khan and his piles of skulls!

Short of making lampshades out of human skin, you can't imagine a bigger thrill.

'Military' Books a Drug in U. S.

By Lee Grove

NOT OFTEN in the news, but a highly competent publishing house, the Infantry Journal Press has fallen on relatively quiet days.

The Press—a private, nonprofit institution—during the war was one of the largest publishers in the country, printing 20 million copies of fighting forces editions alone.

Today the sales of books by the Infantry Journal Press "are comparable to those of a small trade publishing house," according to Col. Joseph Greene, editor and general manager. "The word 'military' seems to put a curse on any book."

"There is just not the interest here in military books per capita that there is in, say, England. Where they don't have any dollars," he added unhappily.

"And we feel that the libraries here are in the hands of highly peaceful, if not pacifist, people."

The editorially independent Press, devoted to a better Army and infantry, in addition to its books and the Infantry Journal (present circulation about 27,000), has a branch, the Sportsmen's Press, publishing books on the outdoors.

In its particular field, sound but not purely technical books, the press has had its best sellers, "Psychology for the Fighting Man," published in both a quarter and $1.50 edition, and the "Soldiers Handbook" have each sold about 400,000 copies.

Colonel Greene, a quiet, reflective man with a neat military mustache, such as is infrequently seen any more, has been in and around writing most of his life.

After three years on a Daytona, Fla., newspaper, he served as an enlisted man in the Army in 1918-19, and in June, 1919, entered "the Point." Graduated in 1923, he served in the regular infantry until he retired in February, 1945.

At various times during his service he was assistant editor of the daily Panama American, correspondent for the Manila Daily Bulletin, contributor of book reviews to a Georgia paper, and editor of the Tientsin Weekly Sentinel, a magazine published for American troops in China.

Along about 1929 he began to write articles for the Infantry Journal, which led to his becoming assistant editor and then editor. Now, in addition to his duties at the press, he finds time to do some outside writing, reviews and fiction.

Together with Elizabeth Abell, he edited an anthology of short stories on the first impact of "the facts of life." It was published by Bantam Books last year. The Greene-Abell team now has a new anthology, on the theme of domestic relations, that will be published by Bantam.

Dr. Edwin E. Willoughby of the Folger Shakespeare Library will have a new book out soon: "The Bible Cryptogram Book," published by W. A. Wilde Co., Boston. Willoughby is not doing for the Bible what Baconian Ignatius Donnelly did for Shakespeare in "The Great Cryptogram," however. Entertainment is Willoughby's only intent.

. . . Under a curse

Farmer's Library

DUNCAN EMRICH, chief of the Library of Congress' folklore division, is back from the New York State Historical Association's Seminars on American Culture, at Cooperstown, with a report on Roger Butterfield that will make all true booklovers envious.

Butterfield, author of "The American Past" and fellow faculty member at the Seminars, has a farm at Hartwick, about 10 miles from Cooperstown, that has been in the family since 1792, and while the Seminars were in progress held a formal opening of his own library building.

The fireproof building is equipped with blower fans, fireplace, bed, approximately 7000 volumes on American history, old prints, a private morgue of newspaper clippings and a card catalogue.

By way of invitation to the "grand opening," Butterfield issued 24x28-inch broadsides; resembling in style rural notices of cattle auctions, which also announced the opening of "the new red barn with Ferguson tractor . . . and special accommodations for Western horses."

Among those who showed up for the opening of what is probably the only especially built private library building on an American farm—and to get their souvenirs at the corn-crib—were Carl Carmer and Samuel Hopkins.

Dorothy Leavitt, who works on "the Hill," is the author of a forthcoming book for 9 to 12-year-olds, "Adventure on the Potomac." A combination Washington guide book and adventure story, it will be published by Little, Brown in September.

"Why the hell do I have to get stuck at the office every night"

Roaming the Office Jungle

Zoologist Is Rough on the Boss

WHITE COLLAR ZOO: Familiar Office Specimens, from the Chairman of the Board to the Boss' Wife. Selected by Clare Barnes, Jr. Introduction by Geoffrey T. Hellman. Doubleday. 73 pp. $1.

HAS it ever occurred to you how much the people in your office resemble animals, and vice versa? How much like sheep the clerical help appears, arriving to punch the clock at 9? How much like little pigs some of the junior partners look? How slimy as the crocodile is office politics?

Clarence Barnes jr., art director of a large Manhattan advertising agency, "rummaging through a bunch of animal photographs one day," was struck by the hilarious similarity between our furred and feathered friends and the personnel of any office. Why not a book of photogenic denizens of the zoo, labeled as familiar office characters?

Barnes could not avoid being impressed with how much elderly clerks resemble old bloodhounds, how much like a long-beaked bird is the snooping boss' wife. From the big lions to the small cats (or from the chairman of the board to the vindictive office gossips), he has integrated the feline tendencies with their human counterparts.

There is tenderness and pathos in the caged squirrel running forever in his wheel entitled, "The Help-Wanted ad said, 'Splendid opportunity for advancement'." And there is mild criticism in the horned toad, arms akimbo and mouth in a perpetual sneer, entitled, "The office manager watches a stenographer sneak in at 9:45."

Speaking of pictures:

Don't give a copy of this book to your boss unless you are fairly sure he has a sense of humor. As a photographic survey of our white collar world, this collection is rather severe in dealing with the executives, who, after all, are not exclusively grizzly bears, tigers, lions, eagles and scowling baboons. Some, no doubt, are almost as terrified in these days of recession as the ducklings and downy chicks pictured as girls fresh from secretarial school.

But Mr. Barnes may be right in his over-all conclusion that business is a jungle. Recently it would seem so!

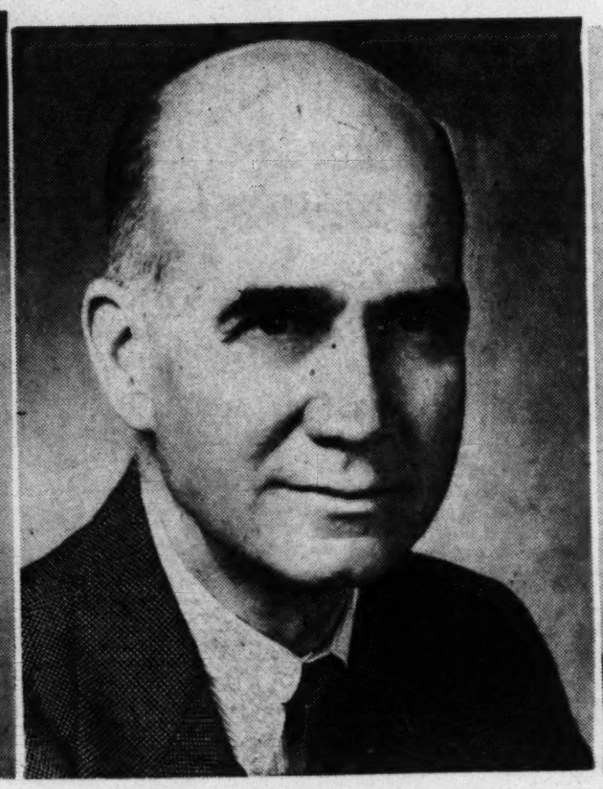
WASHINGTON AREA AFFAIRS

An 11th Hour 'Form Sheet' in Virginia's Gubernatorial Race

JOHN STEWART BATTLE, Charlottesville attorney, unopposed for office since his election in 1930 to House of Delegates . . . Became State Senator in 1933, to succeed himself ever since . . . Conservative in manner and philosophy, he has a distinguished air characteristic of typical "Virginia gentleman" . . . His campaign managers fret because he refuses to toot his own horn . . . Phi Beta Kappa key dangles from his vest when he sits as chairman of the State Senate Finance Committee . . . Born in New Bern, N. C., 59 years ago, he spent his childhood in Petersburg . . . Studied law there while father was pastor of First Baptist Church, but got degrees from University of Virginia . . . Has two sons, John S., jr., 30, father of two children, and William Cullen, 28, both lawyers . . . Tall, gray-haired and erect, the "Byrd Organization" candidate has wrinkles in corners of his eyes and heavy upper lids that give impression of a fixed, twinkling smile . . . His plodding, persistent handling of fiscal affairs in the Legislature has marked him an expert on finance and taxation.



FRANCIS PICKENS MILLER, Rhodes scholar and World War II colonel, is a militant "liberal" and an ardent internationalist . . . The son and grandson of Presbyterian ministers, he is thought by many to show the clerical influence in his campaign speeches . . . A ruddy complexion is accentuated by bushy eyebrows, tonsure-like growth of hair and flashing eyes . . . Served in House of Delegates from 1938 to 1941, a major spokesman for "antiorganization" Gov. James Price . . . On staff of Eisenhower in London, Paris, Frankfurt in the war . . . Had been secretary of World Student Christian Federation, when he became interested in the "North Atlantic Society" that comprises the Atlantic Pact . . . Modest and good-natured in private conversation, he assumes a solemn air on speaker's platform . . . Occasionally lapses into silence with eyes closed, kneading his hands with interlaced fingers, before striking an oratorical climax . . . His wife is American representative for the Economist of London . . . Born in Middlesboro, Ky., 53 years ago, he spent early childhood in Rockbridge County, now lives in Albemarle County . . . Father of Andrew Pickens, 16, and Robert Day Miller, 14.

HORACE H. EDWARDS, the "youngster" among four candidates at 46, cut his political eye teeth in the House of Delegates at 30 . . . Affable, friendly and politically wise, he retains the accent of his native southeastern Virginia, using "gret" for "great" and "tow" for "to" . . . Just under 6 feet, his heavy-set build is taking on a paunch, neatly concealed by well-tailored suits, all gray or blue . . . Estimates a change of shirts (all white) three times daily during sweltering campaign . . . Born on farm in Isle of Wight County, worked to earn tuition at University of Richmond . . . After getting law degree, became delegate, city attorney for Richmond and in 1946 its mayor . . . Broke with "Byrd organization" and resigned chairmanship of State Democratic Central Committee to run for Governor . . . At his best on the hustings when speaking extemporaneously, punctuating remarks with expressive use of hands . . . Waxes emotional when describing needs of Virginia school children and of "the only solution," a 2 per cent sales tax . . . Married in 1926, has three children—Esther, 3; Horace, jr., 14, and Ann, a junior at Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C.

REMMIE LeROY ARNOLD, ebullient and gregarious businessman-farmer, lets his career speak for itself . . . Sold newspapers at 9, quit school at 12 to work in planting mill at $3 a week . . . From that job to riveter, stock room clerk in shoe factory, jewelry repairman, benchman in trunk factory, railway clerk . . . Now president, at 55, of R. L. Arnold Pen Co., second largest pen manufacturing concern in world . . . His membership in civic and fraternal clubs makes him champion "joiner" . . . Boasts that he is only man in gubernatorial race who would lose money by winning the job . . . A natty dresser, given to wearing soft shirts with long collars, double-breasted suits and a wide-brimmed Homburg hat . . . "I'm a businessman not a politician," he says . . . Served on Petersburg City Council, 1936 to1944, helped reduce taxes and raise salaries . . . Practical farmer on the side . . . Raised 168 bushels of corn per acre last year . . . Believes "Arnold pen is mightier than the Battle sword" . . . Born in Petersburg and has lived there since . . . Father of 29-year-old son, Remmie, jr., vice president of his firm, and of Dorothy Arnold Waite, mother of 2-year-old son . . . Lives at Arnolda, 700-acre farm near Disputanta, Va.

HOW THE CANDIDATES STAND ON THE ISSUES

THE FOLLOWING box score on where the four Democratic candidates in Virginia's gubernatorial primary stand on specific issues was compiled by the Alexandria League of Women Voters.

Sources of the information were speeches made at a league convention in Richmond by each of the candidates, published statements of the candidates and news accounts of campaign speeches. In all cases, a League spokesman said, information was checked back with original sources.

The League of Women Voters is a nonpartisan group. It does not endorse any candidate.

AGRICULTURE And Natural RESOURCES	Favors development of the Hampton Roads area; encouragement of farming; reduction of hunting licenses as soon as the State can see its way clear to carry out an adequate program of restocking; employment of more fire marshals to combat forest destruction.	Favors a program of reforestation; special attention to our seafood industry; protection of mineral resources from improper exploitation. Believes there should be improvement of all types of service now rendered by the State Department of Agriculture. Favors a program to extend benefits of electric power and telephone service to all reasonably accessible rural sections.	Favors promotion of electrification and telephones in all areas; amendment of laws to permit existing telephone companies and REA organizations to take advantage of Federal loans. Advocates development of Virginia's port facilities; corrective measures on seafood conservation and antipollution work.	Favors funds for agricultural research; encouragement of programs for farm and soil improvement; use of REA facilities for extension of telephone service; improvement in the game and fisheries industries, etc. Believes should recodify the seafood laws and expand facilities of the Commission of Fisheries. Also favors a study of transportation and foreign trade facilities, to promote more foreign trade for Virginia ports.
EDUCATION	Supports "first-rate" school system; opposes centralization of power in the State government. If Virginia cannot meet its school needs through economy, a bond issue would be the solution. Favors "satisfactory" retirement system for teachers and believes they should be paid a livable salary. Favors larger State appropriations for the existing equalization fund to keep poorer communities on an educational par with the wealthier areas.	Favors basing teachers' salaries on a reasonable minimum salary schedule with periodic increases based on experience, etc. Believes new school construction is imperative—State should render assistance to the localities in carrying this out. Believes entire program can be carried out without additional taxes.	Believes 2% school tax on retail sales will solve school problems. Favors distributing revenues from this tax on the basis of school population.	Best school system in America should be our goal, with a maximum of local participation. Believes State should provide localities with sufficient funds for all teacher salaries up to a minimum of $2000; State to provide a special equalization fund to assist localities with grants-in-aid when localities are unable to bear building program cost. Advocates free textbooks. Favors retirement pay for teachers.
FINANCE, TAXATION	Opposes new taxes on business; opposes sales tax. Believes rigid economy plus business-like administration would enable State to meet its obligations without new taxes. Favors publication every six months of the State's financial position.	Favors pay-as-you-go financing; also favors most rigid economy in operation of the State's affairs.	Favors a sales tax to meet the critical school situation. Believes in a balanced Ludget; needs to be balanced also in terms of need and service requirements of the people.	If the current study proves inadequate, a comprehensive study of all forms of taxable property and wealth should be made in order that a just system of taxation may be adopted to provide essential state services.
HEALTH AND WELFARE	Favors enlargement of the State health program to assure every city and county of a modern and adequate health unit. Also favors adequate provision for care of the aged, blind, dependent children and other handicapped persons. Favors more adequate program under which the State can work with localities in combating juvenile delinquency.	Believes public health has been administered efficiently, but scarcity of personnel in some areas has handicapped it. Favors a public health unit in every county of the State. Emphasis on preventive medicine, elimination of contagious diseases in public schools; better care of patients in tuberculosis and epileptic hospitals.	Public health programs must move on a State-wide front; some 30 counties spend more on protection of chickens and livestock than on health of human beings; set up an effective public health unit in every county in Virginia. There is a need for the State to enter actively the field of recreation, as adviser to local governments.	Favors State-wide public health and hospital program to provide every county with a health unit; State funds to match all Federal funds for hospitals; more medical scholarships, etc. Favors sufficient State funds to reimburse in full estimated local expenditures for welfare. Believes should enlarge and strengthen the jurisdiction of juvenile and domestic relations courts. Also favors carrying forward plans for Statewide rural libraries.
LABOR	Favors collective bargaining between labor and industry with each recognizing the rights of the other.	Recognizes the right of organization; supports the present "right to work" law and the Utilities Labor Disputes Act.	Favors setting up a nonpartisan "advisory board of labor and industry" designed to harmonize labor-management relations.	Favors recognition of equal rights of management and labor; recognition of right of collective bargaining; direct negotiations in settlement of disputes; establishment of State-regulated procedures for conciliation, mediation and arbitration.
POLL TAX	Opposes the poll tax, but also opposes the proposed constitutional amendment as "too complicated."	Will vote for the amendment. Is not convinced of the propriety of all the various provisions of the proposed amendment but believes prompt action necessary.	Favors abolition of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting but is opposed to the proposed suffrage amendments.	Favors abolishing poll tax as prerequisite for voting, without other restrictions.
LOCAL GOVERNMENT	Opposes further centralization of power in State government.	Needs to be strengthened. Believes it should resist tendency to centralize the functions of government.	Favors the setting up of an Office of Local Government to foster a much-needed locality point of view.	Return local government to the people—favors control of schools and welfare by local boards of supervisors except where people prefer to elect school boards; transfer most of present appointive power of courts to local supervisors. Opposes State salary-fixing system.
ROADS	Favors pay as you go for roads; favors good maintenance for county as well as major State highways. (Earlier advocated a five-plank "road beauty" program.)	Favors continuing present system of pay as you go for highways. Opposes diversion of highway funds for any other use.	Favors real all-weather roads throughout the State. Opposes diversion of highway funds from road purposes.	Favors better farm-to-market roads.

Schools Are Heavily Stressed In Statements of Candidates

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

EACH of the four Democratic candidates for the Virginia gubernatorial nomination in the Tuesday primary has outlined in a statement to The Washington Post why he feels he should be elected Governor.

Excerpts from their comments are given in alphabetical order of candidates' names.

Remmie L. Arnold, Petersburg pen and pencil manufacturer, promises "a business administration for the operation of the affairs of the Commonwealth."

He says he has become "greatly alarmed at the continual rise of professional career politicians, whose only idea seems to be to raise taxes, spend the taxpayers' money unwisely and to use this method to build up a machine that will keep them in office."

Any increase in taxes, Arnold feels, would affect "the very economy of our free enterprise system."

"The government of Virginia during the past 25 years has become stagnated," he contends, "because there has been no competition from the Republicans and certainly no competition from within the Democratic Party."

As a businessman, Arnold intends to see that "we get the best services and products for our money."

He is trying "to put something in the State, rather than take something out of it," Arnold says, despite the fact he is "bucking one of the strongest machine organizations in the United States."

Arnold's plan for Virginia is "to create new wealth, better living conditions and make a happier people—regardless of race, color or creed."

The people should elect him, he says, because "they are sick and tired of the professional politicians who make campaign promises they never keep. I will be a Governor who will represent all of the people."

Schools Without More Taxes

STATE SENATOR John S. Battle, a member of the General Assembly for 20 years, places school needs near the top of his statement.

To keep the State's schools "abreast of the times," Battle says, he introduced a resolution in the Senate "under which the Governor appointed a commission to study Virginia's tax laws with special emphasis on school needs . . ."

He is confident his "entire program for school construction, increased teacher salaries and reasonable and adequate retirement benefits can be carried out without additional taxes."

Battle proposes to use 15 million dollars of State's "approximately 21 million dollars surplus" as a "gift" to localities for construction purposes.

Another 15 million dollars would be made available from the general fund at the next session of the General Assembly. A similar amount would be provided each year thereafter as a "gift" to localities.

"I favor the pay-as-you-go program of finances," Battle says. "And as Governor, I would demand the most rigid economy in the operation of the State's affairs."

Battle regards agriculture as "the basic activity of our Commonwealth." He would recommend improvements in "all types of services now rendered by the State Department of Agriculture and associated agencies."

He proposes "to resist to the utmost the current trend toward centralization" of government, and to "encourage the strengthening of local government."

The Most Experienced

HORACE H. EDWARDS, former mayor of Richmond, says he has "two claims on the voters that none of my opponents can boast."

"I am the most experienced man of government among the four, and I am the only one who has offfered a sound, sure method of financing new life into our desiccated school system."

Edwards says he is convinced nothing will be done about Virginia's schools without adoption of a 2 per cent sales tax, the upshot of a resolution he made while working in a Newport News shipyard to finance his own education.

To improve State schools was "the thought in my mind when I first went to the General Assembly in 1934," he says.

"When in 1946 I became mayor of Richmond, I combined my knowledge of government and my resolve to better the school system."

During his two-year tenure, Edwards continues, "I increased taxes, yes, but that tax money went to balance the city budget for the first time in years."

It went even further, he says: "It increased teachers' salaries in the city by $1,500,000 and city employes' salaries by one million dollars."

His sales tax program, Edwards believes, "is a plan to avoid public debt—instead of a pay-out, it is an investment in better wages for future generations."

He calls it "a way to finance our school needs—buildings, equipment and salaries—without putting a mortgage of tax debt on our children."

Old Man of the Sea

FRANCIS PICKENS MILLER, a former member of the House of Delegates, comments that "Virginians who put an 'X' opposite my name will be pledging their faith in a movement for the restoration of democracy in Virginia."

Colonel Miller predicts that this movement, which he has preferred to call a "crusade" in his campaign speeches, will become more and more important through the years.

"Virginians, when they get really excited about the problems of governing themselves, have a way of changing history," he says.

In Miller's opinion, Virginians want first of all "to get rid of the Byrd machine, which they regard as the old man of the sea on Virginia's back and as the perpetual obstacle to its progress."

Miller says he and the people are confident of victory with his platform, because he offers "what the voter wants":

"To have the State's income realistically estimated; and its money wisely spent; no sales tax; an administration that will play fair with management and labor alike; an administration that will face up to problems of public power, farm marketing, conservation, development of the seafood industry and of harbor and port facilities."

They also want "a Governor whose concern for education dates back further than the present campaign," Miller says.

"They want to govern themselves again, to make their own decisions, choose their own candidates and shape their own destiny."

Primary Lineup

Polls in Tuesday's primaries will be open in Alexandria and Arlington and Fairfax Counties from 6:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m., Daylight Saving Time.

Elsewhere in the State, the hours are from 6:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m., Eastern Standard Time.

There is only one candidate for the Republican gubernatorial nomination. There is a two-way contest for the GOP nomination for lieutenant governor but there is no Republican candidate for attorney general. The GOP will have contests in three House districts.

In the Democratic primary, there is a four-way gubernatorial race, a two-man contest for the nomination as lieutenant governor, a two-man contest for attorney general. There are 31 contests involving 46 House seats and one two-man contest for a vacant Senate seat.

Shirley May Youngest, Prettiest to Try Channel

With Shirley Povich

WHERE the swirling stream of the North Sea meets the ebb and flow of the English channel, slack water is unknown. The 21 miles between the white cliffs of Dover and France's Cape Gris Nez are a maelstrom of cross currents, double tides and whirlpools that have devitalized and sucked to doom swimmers and fleets.

POVICH

Poised to set herself against it this week in the newest challenge of the channel is the youngest—also prettiest—swimmer ever to make the attempt, 16-year-old Shirley May France, high school sophomore of Somerset, Mass.

Her trainers await only a favorable tide, which is to say the least angry of of the waters of the lunar month, before giving the shapely 158-pound American lass the signal to try the treacherous passage.

Then she'll tuck her shoulder-length brown tresses into the tight fit of a swimming cap with built-in goggles and submit to a coating of five pounds of axle grease the better to battle the elements.

With each stroke of her flutter crawl, Shirley May will be bidding for the kind of fame attained by another American girl 23 years ago this week, when Gertrude Ederle climbed out of the surf on the English shore and set the world's wireless dit-ditting the news: "Ederle does it—in new record time."

Trudy indeed had done it. And in 14 hours, 34 minutes, bettering by nearly two hours the best previous time. Champion of the channel she was, champion of both sexes.

Not until Lindbergh flew the Atlantic a year later, in 1927, was there a public dither to match the excitement of Ederle's conquest of the channel. She came back to New York to a reception that dwarfed even the greeting to the returning heroes of World War I for sheer frenzy of hero (heroine) worship.

Miss Ederle's triumphant procession up the canyon of lower Broadway produced a record volume of ticker tape, brass bands, fluttering flags and celebrants. Her arrival in New York Harbor on the Berengaria set off a cacophony of tug whistles and low-buzzing planes, while fireboats played their fountain hose in an all-out salute to the husky 19-year-old daughter of a New York butcher.

At City Hall, where Mayor Jimmy Walker presented her with a scroll, 100 extra police were called to break the fan-jam after fences were broken down and doors were stormed, with a total of six women and children injured. The city was blowing its top.

Toasted in Europe for two weeks before her return to America, Miss Ederle was bedecked in the height of milady's vogue, with fashion editors noting the gray stockings, gray shoes and the modish French doll under her arm.

As telegrams of congratulations from President Coolidge and Governor Al Smith were read by the Mayor, standing happily in the background as a plump, smiling rear guard was Miss Ederle's father, "Pop" Ederle. He it was who helped train her for the channel swim after teaching her the crawl as a baby by dangling her from a rope, tadpole-fashion, off the porch of his home on the Jersey shore.

AND UPTOWN at the Ederle Bros. meat and provisions market, on Sixty Fourth and Amsterdam Avenue, crowds of celebrants in the streets were being showered with gift sausages by the happy workers.

for her attempt, announced she had been proffered $900,000 worth of contracts for exhibitions and indorsements. Phil K. Wrigley offered her $5000 to swim the Catalina Channel. Malone brushed it aside as trivial.

The Nebraska Women's Christian Temperance Union got into the act, with a protest to the State Department demanding the recall of American Consul Corcoran from Boulogne following a report he had served wine at a welcome to Trudy. The calmer

Browns Thrive on Calvert, Rap Nats, 11-9

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Mired down by the sinker-ball pitching of Paul Calvert, the Nats received another dunking from the St. Louis Browns yesterday, 11-9.

Calvert gave up all the runs on 13 hits and seven walks in the seven and two-thirds innings he was permitted to sweat it out.

This not so gaudy performance easily earned the Canadian right-hander his eighth straight defeat and boosted the Nats' newest series of setbacks to four in a row.

Neither he nor his teammates was cheered by any of the exclusive little Griffith Stadium gathering estimated at 600.

As has been the case so many times during the last month when the Nats have compiled an abysmal record of only six victories in 35 games, the attack was there, but the pitching was conspicuous by its absence.

The Nats socked out 16 hits off the first three Brownie hurlers and put the tieing runs on second and third in the eighth inning before Tom Ferrick, employed locally last year, came into snuff out the rally.

Joe Ostrowski, the second exhibit in the Browns' pitching parade, was awarded the triumph, bringing his record to 7-6. As an example of how horrible the pitching actually was, Ostrowski gained the decision despite allowing seven hits and three runs in the 4 1/3 innings he toiled after relieving Starter Bill Kennedy.

Paul Lehner got only two of the Browns' 14 hits—both singles, but he stroked them when they counted and knocked in four runs. He produced a two-run single in the second inning when Calvert loaded the bases on walks twice. In the eighth, when the Browns enjoyed anothe. four-run round, Lehner came through with another two-run single.

Harris Finishes Game

This one finally got Calvert out and Al Gettel came into halt the rumpus. Mickey Harris worked the ninth and gave up the final Browns' hit.

Rookie Roy Sievers, batting .319 before the slugfest, upped his average at the expense of Calvert with two singles and a double, and also chased in three runs.

Practically everyone in the Nat line-up got at least one hit. Clyde Vollmer got two and knocked in two runs, ditto Sam Mele, while Eddie Robinson collected a double and a triple.

Since losses are nothing new to the Nats, it may be of interest to baseball historians to know that Sherry Robertson came within one assist of tieing a 57-year-old major league record.

He threw out 11 batters, one short of the mark, and also han-

Arlington Classic Won By Ponder

By Charles Dunkley

Chicago, July 30 (AP).—From last place came the pounding hoofs of Calumet Farm's Ponder today to gallop to a rousing victory in the $87,750 Arlington Classic ending Arlington Park's highly successful 36-day meeting.

Seemingly hopelessly last at the half mile post, sixteen lengths behind, the plodding Ponder charged on to take the lead at the stretch turn in the mile and a quarter race. He flashed under the wire three lengths ahead of Admiral Lea, owned by Mrs. Ada L. Rice, Chicago. It was the same margin by which Ponder defeated Capot in the Kentucky Derby.

In third place, two lengths back of Admiral Lea, came Isidor Bieber's Pelestinian, which finished in the same spot in the Derby. Saint Nicholas, Brown Hotel Stable entry, was fourth, six lengths behind Palestinian. Green Tree Stable's Capot was fifth. John's Joy, owned by J. A. Kinard, jr., was sixth and last.

Ponder Pays $4.40

Ponder's victory was cheeringly acclaimed by 32,047 spectators, largest crowd of the Chicago season. The colt went to the post 6-5 favorite and returned $4.40, $2.80, and $2.20. The race was almost a duplicate of his victory in the Kentucky Derby. His time was 2:03 1/5.

Jockey Steve Brooks, just as in the Derby, held Ponder off the terrific early pace set by Admiral Lea and Capot, piloted by the celebrated Ted Atkinson. At the mile marker, Ponder came up head and head with them. He moved into the lead in the next few strides, and swung into the turn for home well in front and increasing his advantage with every stride.

Capot ran himself into the ground by his early battle with Admiral Lea which saw the first quarter mile done in 0:22 2-5, the half in 0:46 1-5 and six furlongs in 1:10 4-5. Ponder took over from there and was clocked in 1:36 4-5 for the mile.

Admiral Lea returned $4 and $2.80, while Palestinian, second choice, paid $2.60 to show.

Victory Worth $65,450

The victory was worth $65,450 to Warren Wright, owner of Ponder, and was the horse's third stakes triumph of the year. His first was the Kentucky Derby. Later he accounted for the Peter Pan Handicap. However, Ponder was beaten by Capot in both the Preakness and the Belmont Stakes. The two, with the Derby, form racing's triple crown for 3-year-olds.

Ponder's victory pulled him up on even terms with Capot in their battle with Palestinian for the three-year-old championship. It is planned to have the trio come together again in the Classic's companion piece, the American Derby, highlight of the Washington Park meeting opening Monday.

Ponder raised his earnings for the year to $195,375 with his Classic victory and it was his sixth first in 15 starts. The amount bet on the race, $229,243, was the biggest single race handle of the Chicago season. Of this amount, $55,290 was wagered on Ponder to win, $19,530 to place, and $12,567 to show.

Don Wheeler Tops Chisox' 9-2 Victory

New York, July 30 (AP).—The Chicago White Sox spoiled New York Yankee Manager Casey Stengel's celebration of his 59th birthday today whacking the Yanks, 9-2

The Yankee defeat, coupled with Cleveland's victory over Boston, cut the New Yorkers' first place lead to three and a half games over the Ohioans.

Chicago Manager Jack Onslow shook up his lineup and the new blood came through in brilliant style. Don Wheeler drove home five runs on a double, triple and two singles and Floyd Baker knocked in three on a single, fly out and two walks. Charley Kress scored four times.

Vic Raschi, gunning for his 16th victory, was yanked in the fourth during a three-run Chicago rally.

Lefty Bill Wight, former Yankee, started and received credit for his tenth victory. Wight is the first Chicago pitcher since 1947 to win ten games. He left in the sixth in favor of Ed Klieman with two on and none out.

Trucks Whips A's, 11-0, Snaps Macks' Streak

Philadelphia, July 30 (AP).—Pitching his first complete game since June 19, Virgil Trucks snapped Philadelphia's six-game winning streak today as Detroit romped to a 11 to 0 victory.

Trucks came up with a five-hitter as his mates put on a rousing 19-hit attack against three Philadelphia pitchers. Neil Berry had four hits.

Only Wally Moses, on his double in the eighth inning, reached second base on Trucks as he registered his second successive shutout win over Philadelphia. He turned in a one-hit 4-0 victory here on June 14.

Joe Coleman, dropping his second decision to Red Rolfe's team, was Detroit's victim as he was chased during a four-run fifth-inning uprising.

Eighteen of Detroit's hits were singles. The other blow was Pat Mullin's triple with two mates on base in the last inning.

Celebrities Nets $22,616

Profit Sets New High by $7274

The final audit of the National Celebrities Golf Tournament at the Army-Navy Country Club and the Arthur Godfrey show, held early in June, reveals that a net profit of $22,616.43 was realized for juvenile recreational work.

The net return was the largest in the three years these promotions have been conducted by The Washington Post. In 1947 the net proceeds were $10,499. In 1948 the sum of $15,341.98 was realized.

The audit shows that the cost of putting on the Celebrities Tournament and the Arthur Godfrey show was 22.3 cents per dollar of revenue after taxes.

Taxes were the biggest single item of expense in conducting both events. A total of $5,682.27 was paid in taxes, a total expense of $12,205.72. A total of $14,370 in tickets was sold for the golf tournament at the Army-Navy Country Club. The total expense for this event was was $5,225.99, of which $2,455.53 was for tax purposes.

At the Arthur Godfrey show, a total of $19,392 in tickets was sold and the total expense was $6,979.73. Here again the tax item was the biggest expense with a total of $3,226.74 paid over to the Government. Rent of the Armory at $1000 and the necessity of bringing in thousands of chairs and providing a stage, public address system and other items accounted for the rest of it.

But the net profit of the Arthur Godfrey show was increased by the fact that not only did the radio and television star contribute his services, but he paid for bringing his show from New York. In addition, The Washington Post received a check from him of $1685.11 for the payment of expenses at the Armory necessary for the colorful spectacle that he put on that night.

So, not only did Arthur Godfrey make it possible for The Washington Post fund to realize more than $12,000 net profit on the Armory show, but he paid $1685.11 out of his own pocket, and several of his musicians contributed their checks, which he paid them, to the fund.

All expenses in connection with both events which were not absolutely necessary, such as entertainment for participants at the golf tournament and the Armory, were absorbed by The Washington Post.

The party at the Sulgrave Club on Saturday night for the celebrities who were in town for the events was paid for entirely by Mrs. Pearl Mesta, who also deserves the thanks of this newspaper for her support.

Taxes Comprise Nearly Half Cost

Another important factor in keeping down expenses was due to the cooperation of Carter Barron, who brought Allan Zee, production manager of the Loew's Theaters, from New York to arrange features of the Godfrey show.

The Army-Navy Country Club also contributed greatly to the success of the tournament as members volunteered their services which, if they had to be paid for, would have amounted to thousands of dollars.

LouChased, SubBoone Homers to Win, 10-6

Boston, July 30 (AP).—Cleveland's World Champion Indians crept within three and a half games of the American League leading New York Yankees today by ralling for four runs in the tenth inning and a 10-6 decision over the Boston Red Sox.

Indian Chief Lou Boudreau was ejected from the game in the eighth inning after a long argument with Umpire Bill Summers who ruled Cleveland Outfielder Dale Mitchell had thrown his glove at a ball hit by Sox Third Baseman Johnny Pesky.

Summers' ruling gave Pesky a triple, instead of the double which he ordinarily would have made with the hit. The clout drove in three runs for the Sox.

Those three tallies, added to another fashioned in that eighth, pulled the Sox into a 6-6 tie.

Reserve Infielder Johnny Berardino followed his manager to the dressing room for chirping too loudly over the decision from his seat on the bench.

The Indians, who had been blanked by Sox ace Left Hander Mel Parnell in the ninth, went to town for their four scores in the top of the extra inning when Ray Boone, subbing at short for Boudreau, poled a two-run homer into the screen in left.

Mickey Vernon, who drove in three runs with a ground rule double and a short home run, began the tenth by legging an outfield hit into a two bagger. He slid into second ahead of Dom DiMaggio's throw, which Vern Stephens was unable to handle.

Paige the Winner

The next batter went out and Jim Hegan was walked purposely. Allie Clark, pinch hitting for Relief Hurler Satchel Paige, who was credited with his fourth victory, doubled to right for a run.

The hit was a high loft which Al Zarilla tried hard for but couldn't reach. A high infield bounder allowed Hegan to score and Boone then stroked his homer.

The Indians were leading 6-2 until the eighth after driving out Starter Jack Kramer with a three-run attack in the seventh

Bob Doerr doubled as Boston's first batter in the eighth. Billy Goodman singled and Al Zarilla drew a base on balls to fill the bases. Paige here replaced the starting Early Wynn and got Birdie Tebbetts on a swinging third strike.

Pinch Hitter Matt Batts dumped a Texas leaguer into center for one run and Dom DiMaggio, who earlier had singled off Ken Keltner to run his consecutive game hitting streak to 26, popped out.

Pesky then banged a hit into left center which bounced by the diving Larry Doby. The left handed Dale Mitchell hustled after the ball, his glove landing near it.

Summers ruled Mitchell had thrown his glove, sent Pesky to third and Zarilla home with the fourth run of the inning.

The Indians, led by the furious Boudreau, charged Summers, hotly denying the glove had been thrown.

Boudreau said he would protest the decision—despite the fact an umpire's judgment can't be overruled—but forgot the idea after his team won.

Cards Whip Bums, 7-6, Up Lead to 2½

ST. LOUIS, July 30 (AP).—The St. Louis Cardinals extended their first-place margin over Brooklyn to 2½ games tonight by defeating the Dodgers 7-6 in a spine-tingling thriller, with pinch-hitter Joe Garagiola doubling in Gleen Nelson with the winning run in the eighth.

Schoendienst started it with a double, and Musial walked. Glenn Nelson's sacrifice attempt failed and Schoendienst was forced at third. But Enos Slaughter delivered a single into center to score Musial.

Marion flied out for the second out, but Garagiola came through in a big way, batting for Glaviano. Joe's drive to the right-field screen chased across Nelson with the winning run.

GW Appoints Cavallo Coach

Anthony J. (Tony) Cavallo yesterday was named assistant football coach at George Washington U. He's leaving the Army and his post as athletic officer at Fort Meade to take the GW job.

Cavallo, native of Weymouth, Mass., was an All-American halfback on Lafayette's undefeated team of 1937. Later he was an assistant coach of Lafayette's unbeaten eleven in 1940.

Victory seems to be a Cavallo trademark. In the Army, he coached two undefeated football teams — the Ninety-second and Sixty-sixth Divisions.

He's also played pro ball with the Philadelphia Eagles and Providence Steamrollers.

Cavallo left the service in 1946 and coached at Ramsey (N. J.) High School. He reentered the Army in 1946 and coached baseball and football for the Second Army at Fort Meade.

Cavallo's brother, Frank, will be playing his last year at fullback for the Colonials.

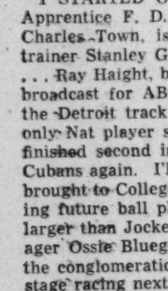
And Why Should He?

This Bert Shepard Just Won't Give Up

LIFE IS BEAUTIFUL these days for Bert Shepard, the aviation hero who had part of his leg shot off on his thirty-second mission over Germany and came back to thrill fans with his attempts to make the major league grade as a pitcher . . . Shep is now player-manager of the Waterbury (Conn.) club in the Colonial (Class B) League. He would be a lot happier if his club was higher in the race, being in fifth place in the eight-club circuit . . . however, Shep, despite an injury set-back, is in his glory now, pitching winning ball, hitting well, and his own boss in the direction of the team . . . the fans love him and I'm told he has developed into a one-man carnival . . . one night he was pitching and his "wooden leg" broke off at the ankle, so he hurled the rest of the game on the stump. He broke another artificial leg sliding, tossed the leg into the air, called a pinch-runner and hopped off the field . . . Shep has beaten out bunts, has stolen second and has hit a dozen doubles so far. The opposition tried to bunt him out of the league when he first began to pitch, but he threw runners out so regularly they don't try it any more . . . Shep finally has his amputated leg in good condition, but, oddly enough, he is having trouble with his good leg . . .he was hit on the ankle by a line drive at training camp last spring. On the way North he stopped here to visit with Joe Kuhel and, in applying heat to the injury, they accidentally burned the ankle . . . this put Shep on the shelf for a while but he just wouldn't keep off the diamond. Against doctor's orders he began taking his regular turn on the mound and it was not until recently that he was in top shape. "Shep couldn't hardly stand up," said my informant, "but he didn't let the opposition know it. He invented sliders, screw-balls and an underhand pitch and fooled the hitters most of the time. He has his speed back now and is pitching good ball" . . . The movies got around to making "The Stratton Story." Perhaps some day they'll do a "Bert Shepard Story." In the meanwhile, more power to one of the most courageous guys that ever lived.



Haight

ABOUT THIS TIME EACH YEAR I read in the papers that the hardheads (croakers) are on the way out of the bay and each year I rent a rowboat, attach my trusty outboard motor (1934 model), chug-chug to my favorite spot and pull them in. Last September 27, seven weeks after hardheads were supposed to have sung their swan song in the Chesapeake, I caught 14 top-size croakers . . . in fact, I was surrounded by boats trolling for rockfish and the occupants were amazed at the action I was getting using two rods and drifting . . . I believe the bait did the trick. I took out two peeler crabs which I cut into some 30 baits. I believe the answer is that the hardheads do not leave the bay around the first of August, as publicized. However, I do believe that the fish stop biting on the Louisiana shrimp which they so eagerly grab during June and July. Those months are before the crabs get around to shedding in big numbers. When the peeler and soft-shell crabs become plentiful the hardheads simply shift their diet. Why eat corn meal mush when there's ice cream around? Thus the fishermen who stick to the shrimp aren't successful and they say the hardhead season is history . . . when I was a youngster on the lower Potomac River we didn't know what a Louisiana or Jumbo Shrimp was. When peelers and soft crabs were not available we used hard crabs, cutting bait from the meat hanging on the knuckles of the legs and claws. And we caught just as many and as large fish as are being taken now.

I STARTED OUT TO WRITE a notes column. Here's some: Apprentice F. D. Rivera, who rode so well early in the year at Charles Town, is back in this section and will ride for owner-trainer Stanley Greene, jr., through the Maryland half-mile season . . . Ray Haight, block off the old chip, did his second coast-to-coast broadcast for ABC (WMAL) Saturday, airing a $25,000 race from the Detroit track . . . time marches on and now Al Evans is the only Nat player still on the roster who was with the club when it finished second in 1945 . . . see where the Nats are going in for Cubans again. I'll never forget the group of islanders Joe Cambria brought to College Park during the war. They were the worst looking future ball players I ever looked upon. Not one of them was larger than Jockey Sammy Palumbo. Everybody laughed but Manager Ossie Bluege, who immediately made plans to rid himself of the conglomeration . . . don't be surprised if Charles Town doesn't stage racing next March. The sporty track is successful in December and certainly can't get any worse weather in early spring . . . I'd like to have a piece of that contemplated trotting track on Route 40, just north of Baltimore. However, that Ocean City thing looks like a bust—simply too far from a metropolitan bankroll . . . I expect that Russians to claim any day now that baseball was invented by a guy named Doubledayski.

Russ Meyer, Roberts Win For Visitors

Chicago, July 30 (AP).—The Philadelphia Phillies captured both ends of a double bill with the Chicago Cubs here today, 4 to 3, and 9 to 1, before an amazingly large Saturday crowd of 33,461.

Russ Meyer set his former mates down with only five hits in the curtain raiser for his eighth victory. Robin Roberts did as good a job in the nightcap, yielding eight hits in breezing to his tenth win.

The twin triumph gave the Phils undisputed possession of fourth place.

The Cubs didn't tally on Roberts until the eighth when Gene Mauch and Hal Jeffcoat singled and Phil Cavarretta doubled to give him a four-for-seven day in his return to first base.

The Phillies scored once in the first inning of the nightcap and then routed Johnny Schmitz with a four-run outburst in the fifth. Frankie Gustine opened the gates with a boot on Richie Asuburn. After two out, Stan Hollmig tripled and Willie Jones, Eddie Miller and Del Ennis singled in succession. Thereafter it turned into a rout, with the Phillies rolling up 16 hits.

Singles by Dick Sisler, Bill Nicholson and Jones produced the decisive run off Doyle Lade in the seventh inning of the opening game. Nicholson hit his eighth homer earlier and Hank Sauer belted No. 20 for the Cubs.

Here's How Golfer Takes His Vacation

By Bus Ham
Post Sports Editor

SINCE YOU are a golfer, I'll tell you about my vacation, since it was a golfer's vacation.

We merely wanted some place to go where we would be away from these melting Washington temperatures, but we didn't want to spend too much time driving.

We first stopped off at a nice, quiet place called the Graeffenburg Inn, about 15 miles beyond Gettysburg in the Caledonia State Park in Pennsylvania.

Good food, sound sleeping and simply a darling little layout at the Caledonia Golf Club. Only 5100 yards long but tough. Every shot down a narrow, hilly, sloping fairway, lined on both sides with trees. Ideal place for a 90-shooter to get himself a 75, if he has a good day off the tee.

ON TO THE Fred Waring properties. Fred loves golf next to his music, has layouts at York, Harrisburg and, of course, famed Shawnee-on-the-Delaware.

Beautiful plant at Shawnee. Strictly first-class but not too expensive. More Washingtonians should go there. Less than 300 miles. Golf course along bank of Delaware down in valley between Pocono Mountains. Well groomed, not too long, not too tough. Fine young pro in Harry Obitz. Something special going on every day for members and guests.

An afternoon at the Glen Brook Country Club at Stroudsburg, Pa., where Gene Tunney trained for one of his fights with Jack Dempsey. There is a golf course that is rugged . . . 6528 yards, hilly, tight, wooded. Not a soft hole in 18.

A LITTLE SIDE trip to Charlottesville to play the Farmington Country Club course where popular Art Doering is pro. A thing of beauty, rolling layout with fine greens, aristocratic old clubhouse. Your playing companions are Gus Tebell and Butch Slaughter of the University of Virginia athletic staff, and Tom Davis, Nation's Business. Slaughter, with 76, six over par, takes Davis as a partner and they cut up Ham and Tebell (81). Slaughter, one of those guys with a magic putter, makes everything under 30 feet.

You finally get out to the National Junior tournament at the Congressional Country Club to say hello to Fielding Wallace and Joe Dey of the USGA. They're all ears about the National Celebrities tournament, say they'll be here next May for the fourth annual.

Carroll Bird, president of the Touchdown Club, pops up with his husky son, Carroll, jr. The Birds are Arkansawyers, and Carroll plans to move back to the old home town, Little Rock, next month.

Where would you like to play tomorrow? It's good for the hips.

Sara Moore Wins Tennis Title, 6-2, 6-3

Miss Sara Moore, veteran local tennis player, annexed the District Recreation Department women's championship yesterday by a straight set, 6—2, 6—3 win over Sosie Girgosian on the Rock Creek courts.

In the men's division, Mark Haller gained the finals with a relatively easy 6—3, 6—3 victory over George Herbert. Leon Strauss came from behind to fill the other final bracket with a marathon triumph, 4—6, 7—5, 6—2, over Arnold Kotz.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS

MEN'S SINGLES (Semifinals)—Mark Haller defeated George Herbert, 6—3, 6—3; Leon Strauss defeated Arnold Kotz, 4—6, 7—5, 6—2. (A long, grueling match in the hot sun.)

MEN'S DOUBLES (Quarter-finals)—Ed Filipek and Nick Smith defeated Roger Spencer and Charles Hackney, 4—6, 12—10, 6—3.

MEN'S DOUBLES (Semifinals)—Richardson and Carruthers defeated Charles Price and Lloyd Rice, 6—0, 6—1; Ed Filipek and Nick Smith defeated Larry Sherfy and Mark Haller, 6—1, 6—2.

WOMEN'S SINGLES (Finals)—Sara Moore defeated Sosie Girgosian, 6—2, 6—3 (Miss More, veteran of many years of tennis in Washington, played too cagey a game for her younger opponent.)

WOMEN'S DOUBLES (Semifinals)—Willie Herbert and Sosie Girgosian defeated Margaret Graham and M. C. DeFreitas, 6—0, 9—7.

Ex-Central Star May Be Next Coach

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Lou Chacos, football star at Central High in 1933, wants to return as head football coach, and he has a good chance.

He has applied to High School Athletic Head Hardy Pearce, but announcement of a successor to John Jankowski will not be made until August 15. Chacos is the only outright applicant so far.

Jankowski relinquished the Central coaching job to become football head at Catholic University. Jankowski is remaining at Central as physical education instructor, and will serve as advisor to the new coach.

Chacos has served as athletic director at Charlotte Hall Military Academy in Mechanicsville, Md., for the past five years.

If Chacos gets the job it will be on a temporary basis until he takes the Board of Education's teachers' exam in December.

Another post waiting to be filled is the head football and track coaching job left vacant by Phil Fox at Roosevelt. Fox quit to become athletic director at Wilson Teachers College last June.

Joe Cardaci, St. John's star tackle and guard, leaves for Corpus Christi, Tex., in two weeks to represent Washington in the East-West All-America high school football game there August 27 . . . The Wigwam Club of Oklahoma City, sponsor of the game, named Cardaci to the All-East team on the recommendation of The Washington Post . . . The 200-pound Cardaci will play his college football at William and Mary, beginning in September. He may be joined there by Doonie Waldron, star quarterback to last year's St. John's team . . . Bill Dunker, Central High end on the football team, center on the basketball team, and high jumper on the track team, has postponed his college career at Penn State to put in a year at Mercersburg, Pa., Academy first

Error Caused by Snake in Glove Blamed as Team Loses Title

Salem, N. H., July 30 (U.P.).—A foot-long black snake was blamed today for the loss of a baseball league title by the Salem Athletic Club.

Players said they lost the championship game of the Lawrence (Mass.) Suburban Twilight League to St. Michael's of North Andover, Mass., because the snake crawled into Shortstop Bruce Magoon's glove.

Magoon missed an easy grounder when he felt something in his glove. He ripped it off and discovered the snake, which apparently had crawled inside when he left it on the ground. The error set up four runs and allowed St. Michael's to come from behind and win, 6-4.

Giants Beat Reds, 8 to 7

Cincinnati, July 30 (AP).—The New York Giants edged the Cincinnati Reds, 8-7, in ten innings today, with Whitey Lockman tripling home Hank Thompson from first base with the winning run.

Thompson singled off Ewell Blackwell, third Cincinnati pitcher, with two out in the extra frame, and Lockman followed with his three-bagger.

dled three other chances flawlessly, but even his monumental performance couldn't avert the fifty-seventh Washington defeat.

Leading 11-6 going into the eighth, the Browns appeared a cinch to make their second straight victory over the locals a lopsided affair. The Nats, however, suddenly became aroused, and before the inning was over they had pushed over three runs, disposed of two Browns pitchers and trailed by only two runs.

Robinson's triple to center started the surge and also got rid of Ostrowski. Ralph Winegarner, 39-year-old reliefer, came and threatened to relieve the Browns of their lead.

Mark Christman tagged him for an infield hit to score Robinson. Two outs later, Lehner booted Ed Stewart's easy grounder and Christman scored. Robertson's single drove Stewart home and when Eddie Yost doubled, Winegarner was excused and Ferrick moved in. He got Vollmer on a pop fly and the spree was over, this time for good.

IN SHORT—The Nats have now lost 15 of their last 16 and 21 of the last 24 . . . Sam Dente retired in the fourth inning when his right ankle, injured sliding Friday, bothered him . . . The Nats are only 3½ games ahead of the cellar-dwellers, but have no chance of overtaking them this series. The set ends, Monday night For today's 2:30 affair, Sid Hudson faces Cliff Fannin.

Scarborough, England, July 30 (AP)—Jack Kramer of Los Angeles scored a 4—6, 7—5, 6—2, 6—4, victory over Don Budge of Los Angeles today to win the Slazenger professional tennis championship.

Budge and Kramer teamed to win the doubles title, defeating Dinny Pails of Australia and Pancho Segura of Ecuador, 10—8, 6—2, 5—7, 6—2.

Ambassador's Al Hoberman, Gals Dominate Carolina Swim

Special to The Post

High Point, July 30.—With two new records to its credit the Ambassador Swim Club of Washington took a commanding position in two divisions of Carolina's open AAU swimming meet at the halfway point here tonight.

In the senior women's 400-meter freestyle relay the Ambassador's team of Willie Orme, Ellen Oberti and Diana Wilson clipped 15.2 seconds off the previous record of 5:25.5.

In the 200-meter relay for junior women Misses Wilson and Orme repeated with the assistance of Barbara Ballentine and Joel Leeming. Their winning time of 2:23.1 was 2/10 of a second better than the previous record in the event.

Diminutive Al Hoberman became the individual star of the meet so far as the Washington aggregation is concerned as he took first places in the 50-meter backstroke and the 50-meter freestyles for boys. He also swam on the 150-meter medley relay team.

His herculean work was good enough to establish the Ambassador in top place in the boys' division of the meet, and the junior girls were alsobeing pushed hard by Ambassador entries.

The meet will be concluded Sunday afternoon. Spectators are still awaiting performances by Stanley Timkin, national scholastic swimming champ of the Ambassador Club who made himself a favorite here in 1947.

200-METER RELAY FOR JUNIOR WOMEN—Ambassador (Wilson, Orme, Leaing, Ballantine); second, Eatchung Lake A (McCoy, Smith, Rohace, Schaedeli); third, Chapel Hill (Davis, Westerfield, Baldwin, Lloyd); fourth, Eatchung Lake B (Eddy, Mudge, Kolb, Lover). Time, 2:23.1 (record).

50-METER BACKSTROKE FOR BOYS—Ambassador (Hobelman); second, Norfleet (Tarboro); third, Smith (Tarboro); fourth, Hornthal (Tarboro). Time—39.9.

150-METER MEDLEY RELAY FOR BOYS—Ambassador (Pekin, Tyndal, Hobelman); (Tarboro A and B were disqualified). Time—2:29.2.

50-METER FREE-STYLE FOR BOYS—Ambassador (Hobelman); second, Hartzog (Raleigh); third, Hornthal (Tarboro); fourth, Norfleet (Tarboro). Time—34.9.

Gustine Optioned To Los Angeles

Chicago, July 30 (AP).—Frankie Gustine, veteran infielder, today was optioned to Los Angeles of the Pacific Coast League by the Chicago Cubs.

The 29-year-old Cub second sacker came to Chicago this spring from the Pittsburgh Pirates. He had been with the Bucs since 1939.

Coach Explains Why Shirley May Swims in Nude

Dover, England, July 30 (AP).—Pretty Shirley May France reached the white cliffs of Dover tonight and her coach disclosed why she'll try swimming the English Channel in the nude.

A bathing suit, said Coach Harry Boudakian, might chafe her skin.

The curvaceous American 16-year-old will try soon to beat Gertrude Ederle's record of 14 hours 34 minutes for the 20 miles from Gap Gris Nez, France, to Dover.

"This is it," Shirley May said on her first glimpse of the Channel.

"I suggested that Shirley dive in nude because a suit will rub off the layers of grease used to protect her from the cold water," said Coach Boudakian. "With the grease gone, a garment would tend to chafe her tender skin."

Some women Channel swimmers strip after the first plunge, but that takes off some of the protective grease.

Boudakian said Shirley May will have her first plunge tomorrow

Herb Goodman Conducts Novice Fishing Tour

By Ralph Murdock

OUR GOOD FRIEND Herb Goodman, recently elected president of the Sales Executive Club of Washington, conducted his third fishing tour for youngsters who have never made their debut in angling circles.

The trip involved his oldest boy, Michael Dennis, 7, who happened to be one of the unfortunate youngsters who were stricken with polio last fall. He was given his initial instructions on the outing and at one time Dennis was completely hidde by a score of instructors and professional advisers.

To make a long story short, Dennis came through with flying colors by hauling in 2 big hardheads and 16 nice spot. Several feet of motion picture film were clicked off with Dennis in action by the proud father and our hero obliged by taking a double header of spot. Shirley Povich, The Washington Post columnist, brought in a double while the pictures were being taken and was naturally forced into the setting. (On the q. t., Shirley got his fishing background in a sardine factory in Maine. He admits he didn't catch 'em, he only helped to can 'em.) It all comes out on a fishing trip.

ART BROWN, who plays a Hammond with the assistance of several canaries, was along and ended up by catching the most fish. Art is Dennis' favorite radio entertainer and was selected instructor in charge.

Lieutenant Elon Turner, chief of police in Prince Georges County, Dr. John C. Sullivan and the writer comprised the balance of the crew. A total of 49 hardheads, 229 spot and one 1½-pound rock was the total catch. We left from the Rod 'n' Reel Club at Chesapeake Beach. The hardheads were taken in 4 to 5 feet of water at Sharp's Island Reef. Capt. Langrell was the skipper.

MIKE KOVEL, John A. Clarke and his wife Estelle caught 10 jumbo-size hardheads on the pier at Franklin Manor. And again, the fair sex hauled in the most fish. Estelle took six while the other two anglers captured two each.

Edgar Robinson, who was fishing on the other side of the pier caught four croakers.

Walter Fleming, Francis Morris and Walton Duckett grabbed 9 croakers, 6 spot and 1 blue while fishing from a rowboat in 4 feet of water after dark off Deep Creek.

Rodie Langley jr., one of the top rock fishing captains in this area reports that the big stripers have not been located at Solomons and that the croakers are also among the missing. He said that the trout are now showing up in larger quantities and that spot are very plentiful at the present. Here's a nice catch made with Rodie. Charles Stofberg, Lou Zion, John Stockton and Dave Posnick brought in 23 trout and 161 spot while fishing near the mouth of the Patuxent River.

A RESUME OF bay fishing narrows down to one thing. If you fish for croakers you will only find them in shoal water. Some of these species are taken in 20 foot depths but the bulk of them are caught in 4 and 5 feet of water.

While Uncle Sam was sending home approximately 100,000 Federal workers due to the excessive heat wave, three gentlemen farmers from Virginia decided it was also too hot for farming. They were Vernon Palmer, Guy Thraves and F. A. (Fritz) Melton. Fishing was unanimously agreed upon as the proper method to cool off. They chartered a boat at Chesapeake Beach and headed for Sharp's Light.

They anchored near Diamond Shoals for spot and captured 125. As they neared Sharp's Island Reef for croaker fishing a haul seining outfit was in the act of laying their nets. So the sport fishermen had to go around on the other side of the little island to fish. As it turned out the haul seiners' net got caught on the bottom and they were forced to release their fish in order to get their net back in good shape. Fritz said, "That's one time we beat the haul seiners. We caught 21 hardheads and they came near losing their nets plus no fish."

Shirley May Latest To Try Channel Dip

National WCTU sat on the Nebraska chapter.

IN England, the newspapers in the first flush of excitement at Ederle's feat had acclaimed her as "Gertrude of America," and she crowded from the front pages the detailed activities of two other femmes of that period—Suzanne Lenglen and Helen Wills. Mlle. Lenglen had made news by turning professional after her conquest of Miss Wills, and the American tennis champion was spouting a running fire of criticism at professional tennis.

And then as if miffed at the whole idea of an American girl bettering the time of England's Capt. Matthew Webb, first man to swim the Channel, the British papers voiced a sour note. The two tugs that had accompanied Trudy had shielded her from the waves, made her crossing smoother, they charged.

Germany, second to America in acclaim for Trudy, loudly resented that criticism and the German Air League offered her a plane in which to visit her grandmother at Stuttgart. Trudy, herself, blazed at the British charge of helpful tugs and declared "they were more of a hindrance than a help, and I was caught in their wash until I asked them to stay single-file."

SHIRLEY MAY FRANCE

Now 41, and matronly looking though unmarried, Trudy did not capitalize heavily on her fame of 23 years ago. The offers of thousands of dollars for exhibitions and endorsements dissolved as such do after the initial excitement wore off and channel-swimming became something of a commonplace. Three weeks after her channel conquest, a 32-year-old American mother of two children, Mrs. Clemington Corson, swam it in 15½ hours.

And Trudy paid, in another way, for her fame. The fearful beating the mountainous waves against her head had produced an almost immediate deafness. She lives now in Flushing, on Long Island, and wears a hearing aid. Back in 1933, she fell down a flight of stairs injuring her back and was a semi-invalid for three years.

She found employment later as a fashion adviser to a dress firm specializing in large sizes. Still later, she sailed to take a post as swimming instructor at Puerto Rico University. When World War II came, she took a job as an airplane mechanic. Today you find her at La Guardia Field, testing instruments for the American Airlines.

Asked if she felt the world had given her the brush-off, she shook her head.

"I would be stupid if I hadn't realized that people couldn't stand forever on street corners playing brass bands," she said, and went back to work.

OF the five persons who had sum the Channel before her, Capt. Matthew Webb of England was the first. He swam it in the easterly direction from Dover Sands to Seagate Beach, on August 24-25, 1875. His time was 22 hours, 35 minutes. Not until 36 years later was it conquered again, by William T. Burgess, swimming in the same direction.

It was on her second attempt that Miss Ederle made it. A year before, in 1925, she was pulled out of the water six miles off Dover, and protested that her English trainer, Jabez Wolffe, had ordered her out when she could continue.

For her 1926 attempt, Trudy and her dad engaged Channel Conqueror Burgess, who had made 16 futile attempts before his success in 1911. Burgess, though born in Yorkshire, was a naturalized Frenchman, and recognized as the greatest Channel authority.

In his final, successful swim, it was estimated that Burgess was forced to cover 60 miles because of the tides to make the 21-mile passage. Water penetrated his goggles, inflamed both his eyes, and jellyfish stung him. He asked for 20 drops of champagne every hour, and was spurred, he said, by his pilots who sang the Marsellaise from their boats.

Lloyds of London was offering 4 to 1 against a successful attempt by Trudy and her father is reported to have bet $25,000 at those odds. Trudy took off from Griz Nez at 7:05 a. m., using a long crawl stroke that was a recent innovation in distant swimming. She was stroking at 28 to the minute and it was reckoned that at the finish she had taken more than 21,700 strokes despite a slowed-down beat.

At the midway point, Trainer Burgess was so alarmed at Trudy's seeming laboring that he insisted that she be taken from the water. When "Pop" Ederle refused, Burgess declared he no longer would accept responsibility for her safety and demanded that her father sign a paper releasing him from any claims or criticisms should she be lost beneath the waves.

"Pop" pointed out that Trudy wanted to go on. So turbulent were the waves now that she couldn't hear shouted messages, so cheering notes were written on a blackboard and lowered over the tug's side. Night and a heavy rain set in as Trudy pumped to within a mile of the English coast, and now she could see the flares and searchlight of the greeting party on the beach.

Even more stunning than the fact that she made it was her time of 14 hours and 34 minutes, beating the record set by the Italian Sebastian Tiraboschi, in 1923. Tiraboschi had made it in 16 hours, 23 minutes in the opposite direction.

A HUNDRED swimmers had attempted it before Ederle, a hundred since. Five succeeded before her, 18 since. In 1901, the Briton Montague A. Holbein invoked the aid of the British government to help him compute the tides, but was exhausted when within a half mile of his goal. The famous Annette Kellerman made three futile attempts.

Miss Ederle was the first to use the crawl. Webb had used the then-popular breast stroke in 1875. Miss Kellerman and most of the others had used the side arm. Henry Sullivan, one of the three who achieved the Channel in 1923, lost 20 pounds in the passage, but picked up 1000 English pounds, offered as a prize by the London Daily Sketch.

A giant Egyptian swimmer, Ishak Helmy, who accompanied Trudy part way on her swim, made an attempt on his own the next week in company with the Frenchman George Michel. They demanded out when they claimed they were bothered by sharks.

Five weeks after Ederle's record-setting feat, Michel tried again, and broke her record. His time of 11 hours, 5 minutes, still stands. Three days after Michel's accomplishment, a young Spaniard, L. R. Delara, struck out for the opposite shore. His body was washed up to the beach 20 days later.

Shirley May France, like Ederle, was taught to swim by her dad. Like Ederle, she bested the rough, 12-mile trip from the Battery to Coney Island as a warm-up for the Channel attempt. At 15 she had turned professional to enter the 12-mile Lake George swim, the only woman in the field of 100. She finished tenth, winning $550.

Like Ederle, she knows the Channel tides cannot be bucked, they must be used. Unlike Trudy that August 7, 1926, Shirley May has a special goal. She wants to bat 1.000 and swim it on her first attempt. Lloyd's of London is saying 5 to 1 she won't lick dat old debbil Channel that hasn't been softened by beatings.

Gay Brewer Wins National Junior Title, 6-4

Kentuckian Defeats His Pal in Final

By West McLean
Post Reporter

Gay Brewer, jr., a cracking good young golfer from Lexington, Ky., yesterday won the United States Golf Association national junior championship by defeating Mason Rudolph, Clarksville, Tenn., 6-4, in the finals at the Congressional Country Club.

Brewer reached the finals by winning his morning semifinal match from James Sykes, Jenkintown, Pa., 2-1.

Young Brewer played almost faultlessly as he shot one under par for the 31 holes required to dispose of Brewer and Sykes. For the 17 holes played against Sykes, Brewer was one under par, and he was even par for the 14 holes of the final match with Rudolph.

The 17-year-old Kentucky lad faced his roommate and co-medalist from the Louisville section when he met Rudolph, 15-year-old junior, who lost to Dean Lind, 1948 winner, in the semi-finals last year.

Rudolph Wins One Hole

The two Southerners halved the first three holes in pars before Rudolph took the lead with a birdie four on the 517-yard fourth hole. This was to be the only hole Rudolph won on the round.

Brewer evened the match on the next hole with a par. Brewer began pulling away at the seventh, won six of eight holes and it was all over.

The Lexington junior took the seventh with a par as Rudolph three-putted from 30 feet. The next also went to Brewer even with a bogie when Rudolph hit his drive into a trap and flubbed his wedge shot short of the green to take a double bogie. Brewer sank a 20-foot putt on the ninth while Rudolph needed two shots to get down from 15 feet.

Brewer held a three-up advantage at the turn. Brewer was out in one-over par 39 while Rudolph needed 42 blows.

Plop Into a Sand Trap

The tenth hole was halved with pars and Rudolph seemed to have a good chance to win the eleventh as Brewer's tee shot dropped short on the 228-yard hole. Rudolph, however, hooked his tee shot into a sand trap from which he needed four strokes to get out to take a six. Brewer got down in three to go four up.

Brewer dropped a 20-foot putt on the next hole for a birdie four and Rudolph three-putted after getting on in two and lose another hole. The thirteenth was halved in fours, one over par, as both boys hooked their drives into the rough.

The 135-pound, slightly built Brewer sank a 42-foot putt on the fourteenth green for a birdie three and Rudolph conceded the match to the baby-faced Brewer.

Brewer automatically qualified for the U. S. G. A. National Amateur championship by winning the junior title.

In the morning round, Brewer defeated Sykes with a one-under par performance for 17 holes, 2 and 1, while Rudolph got a par on the nineteenth hole to edge Tommy Morrow, Shreveport, La., 1 up. Morrow missed a 6-foot putt on the extra hole.

Skip-a-Long Helps Win Title for U. S.

By Happy Walker

Detroit, Mich., July 30. — For the second time in two days the American team successfully turned back the Dominion challenger to clinch the retention of the fabulous Harmsworth bronze for the United States.

The trick was turned by R. Stanley Dollar, jr., in his California entry Skip-a-Long, in the final seconds of the blistering 42-mile speed and stamina test. Yesterday's winner, Dan Arena, lost his slim lead, rounding the last buoy.

Jack Schafer's entry, Such Crust, headed the parade all the way with Dollar's Skip-a-Long pressing at every turn, to take advantage of Arena's split-second motor failure and take today's heat at a breathtaking speed of 94.285 miles per hour.

Speed Records Fall

Water speed records were cracked right and left as Such Crust and Skip-a-Long battled every mile of the Detroit River speed grind. Stanley Dollar, today's winner, set a new heat world's record of 94.285 miles per hour, bettering Miss England's 1931 record of 89.913. Danny Arena broke his own lap record, set yesterday, in today's third, fourth and fifth laps, with an all-time high of 98.164 in that fifth. That was, prior to his ill-fated last lap. Horace Dodge, in My Sweetie, finished third with an average speed of 81.652.

The Canadian challenger, Miss Canada IV, simply could not get going, despite an all-night session of overhauling by a horde of skilled mechanics. Miss Canada finished with an average speed of 77.922, far below the pre-race predictions of her owners.

A rumor that sabotage had been responsible for the below par performance of Miss Canada in the first heat of the Harmsworth yesterday was spiked by Harold Wilson, driver of the pride of the Dominion. Wilson branded the rumors as "absolutely ridiculous."

Promise Potomac Showing

The twin win by Such Crust yesterday and Skip-A-Long today, both carrying the American colors, set a precedent in Harmsworth racing annals. A boat must be a two-race winner to claim the Harmsworth. This will be solved by a special two-lap, 14-mile race on Monday afternoon on the same course to determine the winner.

Interviewed immediately after today's running, both Jack Schafer and Stanley Dollar assured Bill Rogers and Jack Blank, President's Cup Regatta committee members, that they would definitely be on hand to participate in the mid-September classic on the Potomac. Horace Dodge and Harold Wilson, also indicated that they would be present for the President's Cup, provided bugs which dogged their showing here could be ironed out.

Snead's 65 Grabs Western Lead

7-Under Par Gives Sam 201 Total; Harbert Has 202; Mangrum, 203

St. Paul, Minn., July 30 (AP).—Sam Snead caught and passed the leaders in the third round of the Western Open golf tournament today, firing a seven-under-par 65 in today's round for a 54-hole total of 201.

That figure put the White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., pro one stroke ahead of Chick Harbert of Detroit, who wound up today with a 68, and a 202 total for 54 holes.

Lloyd Mangrum, who had been tied with Harbert for the lead at the start of today's play, had some tough luck on the sixteenth hole when his drive went into a trap, and turned in a 69 for 203 and third place.

Snead lost no time in starting his drive to overtake the leaders. He cut one stroke off par on the first hole, taking a three, and from then on never went over regulation figures. He was one under on four more holes of the first nine to make the turn with a 31, five under par.

Harbert and Mangum were two strokes ahead of the rest of the field of 63 that started out this morning. Tied at 206 were Fred Hawkins, Antioch, Ill., with a 68 today, and Demaret, who finished with a 70.

Cary Middlecoff, Memphis, Tenn., and Skip Alexander, Lexington, N. C., were tied at 207.

Train Misses New Redskin At Johnstown

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

En route to Los Angeles, July 30 — It wasn't a case of the player missing the train that had the westbound Washington Redskins in a minor dither this morning.

The train missed John Badaczewski, it's a fact.

The mammoth guard, recently acquired from the Chicago Cardinals, was waiting on the station platform at Johnstown, Pa., last night. But the train whizzed right through without so much as a mocking toot in answer to Badaczewski's frantic wave.

A mixup in the signals, which the Redskins could easily understand, forced the Western Reserve and Boston Yank lineman to spend the night in Johnstown, ride a train solo to Pittsburgh, and catch up with his 1949 mates with a plane hop from there to Kansas City.

Head Coach John Whelchel and Line Coach Turk Edwards filled in a four-hour layover in Chicago with a quick trip to Evanston, Ill., where three Redskin rookies are drilling for the Collegiate All-Star game against the Philadelphia Eagles on August 12 . . . They didn't see much of Len Szafaryn, Laurie Niemi and Bob Goode, however . . . The Skins' headmen were considered "enemy" personnel by the collegiate coaches.

Harry Gilmer, injured rookie quarterback of 1948, joined the 'Skins in Chicago and started this year's campaign by having breakfast with Whelchel, his wife and the former Admiral's terrier, Lani. Gilmer says his damaged leg is "as good as new" after working out with the Alabama football squad this spring and playing steady golf all summer. . . . biggest man on the squad so far, and doubtless for some time to come, is Ed Lovuolo, a dining car operator from New Jersey with no collegiate experience . . . Lovuolo, a tackle, is well over 280 at the moment . . .

U. S. Rowing Regatta Set Here Today

The National Championship Rowing Regatta will be held today up the Potomac River between Three Sisters and Key Bridge.

Featuring some dozen or more of the East Coast's outstanding canoeing clubs, 18 championship classes are slated in the program starting at 10 a. m. Among the clubs to participate will be the Yonkers Canoe Club, New York City; Pendleton Canoe Club, New York City; Philadelphia Canoe Club, the Potomac Boat Club, Washington Canoe Club and Dempsey's Canoe Club.

Officials of the regatta predict that there will be 8 or 10 Olympic rowers on hand to compete for the national championships in junior, intermediate and senior classes.

Ample viewing facilities for spectators are available on both sides of the river above Key Bridge.

Frank Havens, sr.; Bill Havens, jr.; Ebbie Trilling, Dusty Rhoades, Jack Eiseman, Bill Eiseman, Ken Clarke, Bill Schorr, Andy Thomas and Ernie Reidell will be on hand attempting to capture some of the national championships against an outstanding field of national canoeing experts.

Annapolis Racer Sets World Mark

ard Dunn, of Annapolis, Md., set

Norfolk, Va., July 30 (AP).—How- a world's record for the mile and two-thirds in the Class D service runabouts here today in the Tidewater Motorboat Racing Association's third annual regatta. Dunn raced the first lap of the second heat in 42.795 seconds. The old record was set by W. D. Jefnings, of Ocean City, N. C., in 1940 when he drove his Minerva around the Red Bank N. J., course in 43.432.

Heurich, Cameo Open 3-Game Championship Series Monday

A free-swinging, wide-open best of three-game series to decide The Washington Post-Industrial League championship begins Monday at 5:30 p. m. on the South Ellipse, with the Heurich Brewers and Cameo Furniture Co. the principals.

Cameo won the title last year and took the first half championship this season. Heurich took the second half crown.

Second game of the series is slated for Wednesday, and if a third game is necessary, it will be held on Friday.

Both teams got to the playoffs on hitting power. Much of Cameo's slugging is provided by its double-play combination, Shortstop Rufe Crawford and Second Baseman Jack DeCarlo, both playing their first year with the club.

The Brewers, who have won more Industrial League titles than any other team, bank on a string of veteran sluggers like Jim Castiglia, Jerry Zanelotti, Elmer Leukhardt, Red Giegerich and Pepco Barry.

The Washington Post-Industrial League champion will be one of seven weekday league titlists competing in the annual double-elimination city championship series which starts August 8 on the Ellipse.

Champions which have already clinched their berths are Northeast Body Works of the Departmental League, Philco Radio of the Northern Recreation League and the D. C. Fire Department of the Eastern Recreation League.

Other leagues represented will be Fairlawn League No. 1, Fairlawn League No. 2 and Capital Transit. Winner of the city tourney will represent Washington in the All-American Amateur Baseball Tournament late in August, probably at Johnstown, Pa. Glenn L. Martin, the airplane designer, is sponsor of the AAABA round robin.

Wiffy Cox Proves Perfect Host at Junior Golf Tourney

Wiffy Cox, popular pro at Congressional Country Club, site of the National Junior last week, made an extremely nice gesture when he instructed his pro shop help to render any help possible, such as cleaning clubs, etc., to the juniors, free of charge. Assistant Jocko Miller even went so far as to give one of the boys, Tony Baker, Atlanta, Ga., free instruction on the putting green . . . Tony wound up winning 25 cents from Jocko.

Frank Emmet's scrapbooks recording 22 years of junior golf in Washington aroused much interest as well as quite a bit of envy among the junior golfers and officials from other parts of the country. The majority of other sections have nothing resembling Washington's full ju[illegible] golf program.

Ray Terry, son of Memphis Bill Terry of baseball fame, got what was probably the worst break of the tournament when, leading one up after 16 holes, both he and his opponent, Florian Weinhauss, St. Paul, Minn., drove the seventeenth green. Weinhaus sank his putt for a birdie deuce and Ray's caddie walked over to his ball, picked it up and threw it to Ray. This cost Ray a chance to match Weinhaus's bird and lost the hole, making the match even.

Again on the eighteenth, with both boys on the green in regulation two, Ray's caddie repeated his performance after Ray had taken one putt and had had an eight-footer left, and Weinhaus dropped his second putt for a par. Ray lost the match, 1 up.

When Ray mentioned the incident to the caddie master, he was consoled, but reminded that it was his look-out to warn his caddie against such mistakes. Ray replied that after 16 holes w,thout any mishap he thought everything was all right. However, the caddie must have been saving up for the last two holes.

Washington Golf and Country Club is canvassing its members on the possibility of holding a member-guest invitational golf tournament . . . If the members get behind the idea it will be held September 7 through 11 . . . qualifying round the first day for flights of 16 with 18-hole matches each day . . . The United States Golf Association has extended the deadline for entries in the first annual girls' junior amateur championship to August 4. D. C. Printers Out to Regain Prestige

Columbians Seek 1st Title Since '41

Washington, once a power in International Typographical Union baseball circles, has high hopes of regaining lost prestige in the week-long tourney starting Monday at the Polo Grounds and Ebbets Field.

The local printers are anxious to win their eighteenth championship in the 35 years of the international baseball competition. Thing to remember is that the Columbians haven't been able to cop the crown since 1941.

A big thing in their favor is a thriving youth movement that enables the Washingtonians to field a team that's averaging only 25 years.

The three-man delegation from The Washington Post isn't hurting it in the least. Three sturdy apprentices, all with minor league experience, will be filling three of the first-line posts.

Don Bulmer Al Buschling Bill Garner

Catcher Don Bulmer played with the championship Boston team in last year's tourney and won the most valuable player award. Bulmer, 24, 180-pounder, currently batting .300, last played with Fall River, New England League. Before that he saw service with five other clubs ranging from Class A to D.

Two Washingtonians — Bill Garner and Al Buschling—rove the outfield for the printers. Both played together at Roosevelt High. Garner, 25, who batted over .300 for Trenton of the Interstate League last year, is hitting a cool .360. Buschling, 25, who served stints with Montreal, Quincy, of the Three-Eye League and Danville, Va., is batting .330.

The local club has won 15 of 20 games this season, finishing runner-up in both halves of the Departmental League. In six games with Northeast Body Works, league champs, the printers won four.

Manager Buck Grier, who spells Bulmer behind the plate, has three first-line hurlers, Gene Collins, Charlie Hines and Harry Wolfe. Veteran George H. Mosedale, jr., is his reliefer.

The infield's composed of Billy Valentine, 1b; Harry Hofberg, 2b; Joe Glotzback, ss, and Jerry Clubb, 3b. Frank Ciango is the third outfielder and Teddy Watson, all-around man, is a capable utility player.

Vandenberg Tells Stars to Play Tennis

THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS of Second Lieut. Charley Oliver and Capt. Robin Hippenstiel in local tennis tournaments during the past three weeks have resulted in their being "ordered" to take somewhat of a vacation from their Air Force duties.

"You two are a credit to the Air Force," commented Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg at a party for the Air Force Leech Cup team at the general's house last Thursday. "How would you like to report to the National Amateur singles championships at Forest Hills, N. Y., September 29?"

Twenty-four-old Lieutenant Oliver, fresh out of West Point, stammered, "But sir, I've already received my orders and they don't say anything about tennis."

"We'll take care of that," replied the general. "And besides, I know this tennis game requires a lot of practice, so why don't you participate in every grass court tournament between now and the time of the Nationals."

The captain was speechless, the lieutenant floored. "Yes, sir," they said, as they were taught to say.

THE ORDER required them to accept invitations from the three swankiest tournaments on the grass court circuit: Newport Casino's annual event at Newport, R. I., August 8-13; the National Doubles championships at the Longwood Country Club in Chestnut Hill, Mass., August 15-20; and the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club event at Rumson, N. J., August 22-28.

Not such a tough assignment for a couple of guys who love tennis as much as they do.

Oliver hasn't been around as long as Hippenstiel and thus Washington can't claim him as it does the latter, who was originally from California. The only other localite to announce his entry in the National Singles at Forest Hills is Gil Bogley, currently defending his National Junior singles crown at Kalamazoo.

Parkside Grill Wins Second-Half Title

The Parkside Grill won the second-half championship of the Recreation League No. 3, defeating Providence Life Insurance, 3-0, yesterday at the West Potomac Park. Bobby Payne hurled three-hit ball for the winners.

Jack Frost Captures Boys' Crown

Kalamazoo, Mich., July 30.—Gil Bogley of Washington, D. C., and Jack Frost of Monterey, Calif., annexed the Western junior and boys tennis crowns, respectively, here today.

Bogley, top-seeded junior, accomplished an impressive straight-sets win over Jerry de Witts of Oakland, Calif., 6—4, 6—4, 6—4.

First-ranked among the boys, Frost registered a quick 6—0, 6—0 trouncing of Don Thompson of Jackson Heights, N. Y.

Eighteen-year-old Bogley succeeds Tony Trabert of Cincinnati as the Western titleholder. Tomorrow he launches a campaign here to defend his national junior championship.

A major upset was recorded in the boys' doubles when the unseeded team of William Cranston of San Marino, Calif., and James Read of Santa Monical, Calif., edged out the top-seeded duet of Frost and Hershel Hyde of Berkley, Calif., 6—2, 5—7, 6—4.

Gil Bogley Seeded First at Kalamazoo

Kalamazoo, Mich., July 30 (AP).—Gilbert Bogley of Washington, D. C. today was given top position among the juniors in the National Junior and Boys Tennis Championship tournament opening here Monday. Jerry DeWitts of Oakland, Calif., was seeded second.

Third ranking went to Hamilton Richardson of Baton Rouge, La., who was the boys' champion last year. Richardson was seeded eleventh in the Western tournament ending today and was moved up to third in the National by reason of his good play this week.

Alexandria Boys Club Team Plays At Lancaster

The 13 and 14 year-old Alexandria Boys Club baseball team shoved off yesterday in a borrowed Congressional School bus for a game with the Boys Club of Lancaster, Pa.

The Alexandria team has a record of 34 victories without a loss. It is undefeated in the boys clubs of Washington and Alexandria Recreation Department leagues.

The game at Lancaster will be played at Stumpf Field. Guests at the game, sponsored there by the Junior Chamber of Commerce, will be George Kell, Detroit Tiger star; Nelson Fox and Joe Astroth of the Philadelphia Athletics.

On July 6 the same teams played in Alexandria and Alexandria won by a score of 9 to 4.

9 Clubs Play For Golf Title

Nine clubs will send six-man golf teams into a 36-hole tournament for the second-half championship of the Interclub Junior League August 15 at Manor and August 16 at eKnwood, 18 holes each day.

Kenwood and Manor, league leaders in the first half, will be favored. Other teams entered are Columbia, Argyle, Prince Georges, Washington, Congressional, Army-Navy, and Woodmont.

Caps Romp, 10-0

The Washington Capitols chalked up their twenty-fourth win of the season as they romped over the Falls Church Garage, 10-0, yesterday at Falls Church High field. Dick Harris got four hits for the victors.

Shamrock Wins, 7-0

The Shamrock Trucking Co. defeated the Columbia Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, 7-0, in a non-league game yesterday on the Ellipse. Larry Frances pitched three-hit ball and Perry Flakais got three singles and drove in three runs for the winners.

Air Force Team Wins Leech Cup

By Jules Loh

A powerful Air Force team captured the fifteenth annual Leech Cup tennis tournament yesterday by trimming defending champion, Navy, 7-2, on the Army-Navy Country Club courts.

Yesterday's Air Force victory wasn't quite as impressive as their Friday accomplishment, when they shut out Army, 9-0.

It was the first time the Air Force team has had its name inscribed on the trophy donated by Abner Y. Leech 25 years ago.

However, this was only their second year of competition, as the Army and Navy were the only contenders prior to last year's tournament.

Navy 10-Time Winner

To date, Navy has won 10 events, Army 4, and the Air Force 1. There were no matches held in 1933 and '34, and during the war years of '41-'47.

Second Lieut. Charley Oliver, Air Force champ, and Capt. Robin Hippenstiel, Mid Atlantic titlist, paced the winners with quick 6—2, 6—2, and 6—1, 7—5, wins over Lieuts. Elston Wyatt and K. K. Jones, respectively.

Air Force Captain Art Dreyer came from far behind to register a minor upset over Lieut. Gordon Hodgson, 1—6, 6—1, 6—3.

Major Tom Bonner netted the fourth Air Force singles triumph with a close 6—4, 7—5 win over Lieut. Cmdr. Jim Behr.

Fliers Win Doubles

The Air Corps made a clean sweep of the doubles events. Hippenstiel and Bonner teamed up to whip Jones and Capt. Jim Farrin, 6—0, 6—4; Oliver and Powell edged out Wyatt and Lieut. Ed Doyle, 4—6, 6—3, 6—3; and Col Ramsey Potts joined forces with Capt. Pete Keller and licked Behr and Lieut. Charley Anderson, 6—4, 6—3.

Aussies Oust Mexico In Davis Cup Test

Wilmington, Del., July 30 (AP).—Australia won the North American Davis Cup competition today when Frank Sedgman and John Bromwich defeated Mexico's Vega brothers, Armando and Rolando, 6—0, 6—4, 6—2, in the doubles.

The victory gave the Aussies the necessary three out of five wins. They face Italy in the interzone final, at Rye, N. Y., next month.

The youthful Sedgman, who played himself into exhaustion yesterday in winning his singles match, and the 31-year-old Bromwich, a veteran of the Davis Cup wars, teamed perfectly.

In the first set they concentrated their fire on Rolando, and, although there were a few fierce exchanges at the forecourt, they had no trouble.

The second set was closer. The Australian duo broke Rolando's service in the seventh game for the deciding margin. In the eighth game, the Mexicans five times were within a point of breaking Sedgman's delivery, but couldn't turn the trick.

There were five straight service breaks in the third set by both sides, until Sedgman held his own offering in the sixth game. Bromwich lost the deciding point in the fourth game when he hit the net with his racquet.

Both the Vega brothers appeared extremely tired at the end of the set, after having thrown their full resources into the second set.

Menendez After Ortiz For Cooper

A world champion will be on the Washington scene in the near future if all goes as Matchmaker Gabe Menendez hopes it will.

Mrs. Florence Turner's maker of bouts announced last night that he has a conference coming up tomorrow with Johnny Rogers, manager of World Bantamweight Champion Manual Ortiz regarding the possibility of a meeting with the District's own Jimmy Cooper, who's rated just about as hot as the weather right now.

The match, if closed, will be staged at Griffith Stadium, August 15.

Besides the proposed bout with Cooper here, Rogers is scheduled to talk fight with officials at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., before the champion sails for London to defend his title against an opponent yet to be named.

Ortiz has twice been bantam titleholder. He regained the crown by defeating Harold Dade. In his last defense Ortiz whipped Dado Marino.

Record 148 Swimmers Enter Week's Meet at Takoma Pool

An outstanding field of 148 men and women swimmers of the Atlantic seaboard will invade Takoma Park pool tomorrow night for the seventh annual A. Earle Weeks Memorial meet which opens at 8 o'clock.

The bulk of the entries come from 15 clubs, from North Carolina to New Jersey, comprising the largest number of teams ever to turn out in the history of the meet. Of this number, four-Takoma Park, Ambassador, Indian Spring and South Post—are from the District area.

Highlighting the star-spangled roster will be all of the 1948 winners of the four men's open events and two Washington girls, Wilhelmina Orme and Bettie Roland, who captured three of the women's events last summer. The only winner not in the meet this season is Evelyn Barbee, Goldsboro, N. C. lass, who outclassed backstrokers in 1948.

The four men's events are the 100- and 200-yard freestyles, 150-yard backstroke and 200-yard breaststroke. Current standards were set last summer by Jess Greenbaum, freestyler from the Lakewood Club of Baltimore, his teammate Jimmy Thomas who won the backstroke, and Aaron Kurtzman, Plainfield, N. J. breaststroker.

In the women's events, the latest record dating back to 1945 when Ambassador Club's Leola Thomas Wahler won the backstroke in 1:13.2. The oldest mark in this group is the 100 breaststroke time of 1:20.8, set by Peggy Pate, Goldsboro, N. C., back in the inaugural weeks meet in 1943.

Two junior events have been added to the agenda Monday night. Boys of 14 and under and girls 13 years and under will compete in special 50-yard breaststroke races.

Team Match Set On Turner's Mat

A special two-man team match has been added to the wrestling card at Turner's Arena next Wednesday night, pairing Babe Sharkey and Bibber McCoy aagainst Ivan Kamaroff and Tony Cosensa.

A double wind-up tops the card, Michele Leone, winner of last week's match with the Golden Superman, meeting George Macricostas and the Superman tackling Chick Garibaldi.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Profits Off 20%; Dividends Up 8%

Corporation directors are acting even as you and I. They see business volume dropping, profits shrinking. They know if that trend continues for another six months or so they'll have to reduce or eliminate dividents. But they're hopeful. They're willing to give the economy and profits a further chance to make good. So even though corporate earnings are off about 20 per cent from a year ago, dividends are up 8 per cent (see chart).

Livingston

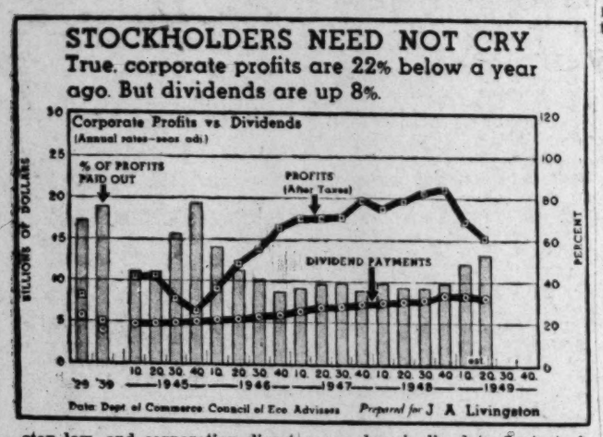
This constitutes standard practice. Corporation officials don't like to have jumpy dividend records—50 cents a share one quarter, $1 the next, and nothing the third. Therefore the tendency is to maintain dividend rates, despite ups and downs in profits. The policy imparts greater value—salability—to the common stock, when, as, and if the company wants to raise additional capital.

In the second quarter, corporations paid out an estimated 52 per cent of their earnings in dividends as against 48 per cent in the first quarter, and 38 per cent throughout 1948. Back in 1939, the proportion was much higher—76 per cent; and in 1929 it was 69 per cent.

Directors' Dilemma

Over the years, directors customarily let stockholders have about six out of every 10 dollars of earnings. That high standard may not come back in the current era. Corporations have not found it easy to raise money by selling common stock. So they've been holding on to the shareholders' money—plowing back earnings—in order to finance postwar plant expansion.

A vicious circle results. Because corporations cling to earnings, dividends tend to stay low. Therefore, investors seeking high returns are less inclined to buy stocks. In turn, stock prices tend to stay low, and corporation directors are less inclined to float stock on the market. Their holding on to earnings increases the task of raising new money by selling common stock.



Though companies are finding it harder to keep pace with past earnings, they're not going into the red. In my tabulation of the first industrial companies to report second quarter earnings, 116 showed decreases in profits from the second quarter of 1948, 63 increases. However, only seven reported deficits.

Exceptions to the Trend

Excluding General Motors and the Big Three steel companies (because of their dominating size), the over-all decline for the companies in the tabulation was 18 per cent from the second quarter a year ago. (The Council of Economic Advisers estimates earnings in the second quarter were off 22 per cent from a year ago.) For the first half, the drop was 9 per cent. Industries which managed to buck the downtrend (on the basis of these early returns) were auto and auto parts, cement, drugs and cosmetics, railroad equipment, the Big Three steel companies (United States Bethlehem, and Republic), tobacco, and beer. Utilities showed a good gain over a year ago.

The following table shows the change in earnings from last year on (1) a quarterly basis and (2) a half yearly basis:

Industry	From 2d Quarter 1948	From 1st Half 1948

*Excludes General Motors Primarily small producers Excludes General Motors and Big Three steel companies.

The decline reflects internal adjustments of industry. Once prices began to drop, manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers curtailed inventories. Whereas in the first five months of 1948, inventories rose two billions, in the first five months of this year they decreased two billions. Thus, the net change in purchasing—of businessmen buying from one another—was at an annual rate of more than eight billion. That's a lot of business to poof away—just like that.

Inventory Turnaround?

Some turn in inventory policy may be at hand. The drop in business loans, which has been continuous since January 19, shows signs of subsiding. True, last week, Federal Reserve member banks reported a decline of 97 millions. But 75 millions of that comprised a large pay-off in New York City by a utility. In six Federal Reserve areas—Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, and Dallas—loans for commercial, industrial, and agricultural purposes expanded.

This suggests that a strategic change in business policy may be at hand. Businessmen, apparently, can't hold off purchases any longer. Their inventories are too low. The continued upturn in nonferrous metal prices—lead rose this week again—supports the thesis.

C. & P. Net Cut By Sharp Rise In June Costs

By S. Oliver Goodman

A sharp increase in operating expenses cut Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.'s earnings, in June.

Last month's net totaled $279,045, a drop of $44,696 as compared with the same month last year. June operating expenses, including taxes amounted to $2,709,735, an increase of $212,157. Operating revenues of $2,983,226 compared with $2,823,226 last year.

At the end of June, Chesapeake & Potomac operated 456,124 telephones, a gain of 24,912 over a year ago. Users made 58,180,350 calls, as compared with 55,929,000 in June, 1948.

For the first six months this year, Chesapeake & Potomac reported net income of $1,830,110 as compared with $1,913,055 in the same 1948 period. Operating revenues were $1,150,788 higher, while operating expenses were $1,206,456 higher.

Total plant in service on June 30 was valued at $105,264,726 against $96,014,629 last year on the same date. Return on average plant investment for the 12 months ended June 30 was reported as 3.87 per cent, against 3.16 per cent in the previous 12 months.

STORE SALES: Washington department store sales spurted 16 per cent in the week ended July 23 over the same 1948 period, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported last night. This brought dollar volume of store sales here in the four weeks ended July 23 to 8 per cent above the same period last year. Regionally, the Fifth Federal Reserve District showed a sales gain of 7 per cent for the week and 2 per cent for the four-week period.

WHO'S WHO TODAY: I. M. Stewart, former Washington attorney, has been elected a vice president of Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. . . . Paul D. Sleeper and Vernon W. Holleman, local insurance executives, have returned after attending the first Graduate School in Agency Management at Chicago . . . Max C. Bee of Washington has earned membership in the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York's National Field Club . . . Walter Wrigley has been promoted to assistant manager of Smith's Select Furniture Stores . . . Executive Vice President John E. Nelson of Gulf Oil Corp. will retire September 1 . . . Myron T. Herreid has been appointed vice president and general manager of the gas and coke division of Koppers Co., Inc., succeeding W. Reed Morris who will retire August 1 after 34 years with Koppers.

REFUNDING: The United States Treasury is finally running short of money. That was the interpretation placed by financial men on the Treasury's announcement Thursday night that it is inviting bids on a billion dollars of new 91-day bills to replace an issue of $801,987,000 which falls due August 4. The Government, in other words, plans to take in about 200 million dollars in excess of the maturing issue. Not for more than three years has the Treasury had to sell more securities than the amount involved in a maturing issue.

CHAIRMEN: Stephen O. Porter, president of the Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, yesterday announced committee chairmen for the coming year as follows:

Entertainment, John R. Graff; women's Mrs. Ethel R. White; advisory, Francis E. Robey; archives, Walter Clements; athletics, Lawrence Hagan; audit, Robert Crofoot; banquet, John M. Christie; dollars and sense, Olen Thompson.

Educational, Samuel C. Redman, jr.; finance, Herbert D. Lawson, jr.; forum, Carl Dunnington; house, Wilmer Waller, jr.; membership, Simmonds; program, Ralph H. Mittendorf; publicity, Miss Pitblado Feldman.

Public speaking, William Bryarly, jr.; public relations, George M. Rowzee, jr.

Advisory committee: John Christie, Francis E. Robey, W. L. Sanderson, Robert Lacey, Richard Norris and Paul Seltzer.

EARNINGS: St. Joseph Lead Co. and domestic subsidiaries reported net income of $4,852,390, equal to $2.45 a share, for the six months ended June 30. This compared with $5,948,539, or $3.01 a share, for the like period last year.

Dividends received from Compania Minera Aguilar, S. A., are not included, since the company's applications to the Argentine government for exchange permits to convert the pesos into United States dollars so far have been denied. Other earnings reports follow:

Rise in Stocks Halts Despite Good Earnings

New York, July 30 (AP).—The stock market's summer advance broke down this week in a mixture of hot wet weather and speculative timidity.

At the weekend Wall Street was none too sure whether the breakdown was a temporary problem which could be repaired by more aggressive demand for stocks—or whether the summer advance had come to the end of the road.

Prices moved during the week against a background of scores of corporate earnings reports which were better—far better, in many cases—than had been expected.

The market moved up briskly on Monday and on Tuesday reached the peak of its rally and a high since May 19. Since mid-June, immediately after dropping to a 4½-year low, the market had been steadily climbing.

On Wednesday, though, the diet of earnings on which the market had been fattening apparently got a little too rich.

Chicago Seesawed

Trading was comparatively lively but prices seesawed. That was the first day the market had a chance to appraise U. S. Steel Corp.'s quarterly and six-month report.

U. S. Steel announced that net income for the first half was the largest for any similar six-month period in 20 years.

The impact of this information on Steel's common stock was a little less than spectacular, it closed 12½ cents lower at $23.25 a share.

On Thursday General Motors announced its first-half results. The company earned more, produced more, and sold more than at any other time in its history. The stock closed 12½ cents lower at $61.87½ a share.

The Nation's No. 2 steel producer, Bethlehem Steel, reported on Thursday, after the close of the market, that its earnings during the first half were the largest for any six months in its history.

The market, of course, is traditionally more concerned with what a given company is going to earn in the future than with what it has earned in the past. But, at least in the case of General Motors, the prospects are excellent that high earnings will be maintained for the balance of the year at least.

Steel executives, on the other hand, pointed out that new orders for steel have declined from the high point of the year and that the future for the industry was cloudy.

One widely held theory for the market's dead-pan response to these corporation reports is this:

The income reports of the steel companies were issued while a presidential fact-finding board is weighing the pros and cons of the argument between the steel industry and the steel union over the question of more pay and social benefits.

The position of the union, it was felt, was vastly strengthened by the mere admission of these record profit figures.

Breyer Ice Cream Co. Expands Advertising

The Breyer Ice Cream Co. has expanded its regular newspaper advertising during the summer by adding 90 newspapers in medium-size and small communities in eight States.

This added promotion on Breyers Ice Cream consists of 400-line and 200-line copy—one advertisement each week for eight weeks—a total of 2400 lines. The eight States are: Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, plus the District of Columbia.

Tribute Is Paid Wm. Montgomery At Dinner Party

Among his souvenirs to commemorate 55 years of service to the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., President William Montgomery now has 12 silver goblets and a tray.

Montgomery

The token of esteem was presented to him Wednesday night at a dinner party in his home, 6200 Nebraska ave., attended by local business and civic leaders, members of Congress and the judiciary, and Army and Navy leaders.

Informal talks, paying tribute to Montgomery's long service to Acacia and his civic work, were given by Roger Whiteford, an Acacia director, and Chief Judge Bolitha Laws of the District Court.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, July 30 (AP).—Light selling pressure was enough to send grains lower on the Board of Trade today. The market lacked speculative support, particularly from outside sources, and dropped for losses of more than a cent in wheat and corn.

Rye developed more weakness than anything else. Soybeans ended with little price change on a much reduced volume from other days this week. Only firmness shown was in lard, which scored new highs on the current advance.

Wheat ended 1⅛ to 1⅜ lower, corn was 1¼ to 1⅜ lower, oats were ⅝ to ⅞ lower. Rye was 2¼ to 3½ lower, soybeans were unchanged to ½ lower and lard was 3 cents lower to 30 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Although the final trading session saw prices easing off, July was a fairly good month for grains. It was particularly good for rye, soybeans and lard.

The range follows:

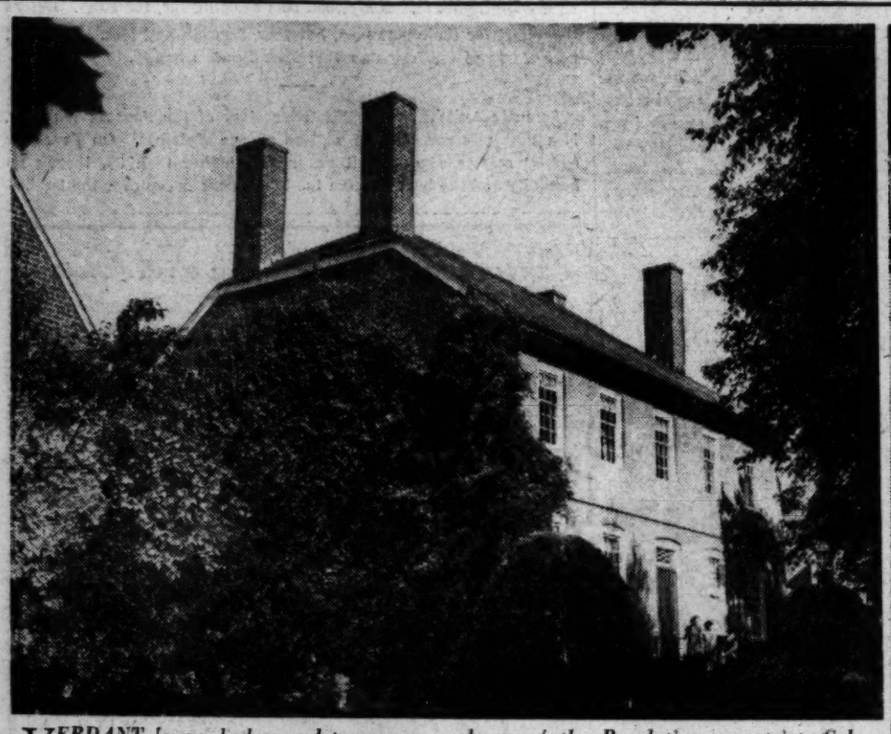
The Washington Post
WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JULY 31, 1949



VERDANT lawns, hedges and trees surround the historic Kenmore mansion in Fredericksburg, Va. It was the colonial home of the Revolutionary patriot, Col. Fielding Lewis, and his wife, Betty Washington, only sister of George Washington

HERE in the kitchen, an outbuilding to the north of the Kenmore mansion, visitors sample gingerbread made from the original recipe of Mary Washington, mother of George and Betty Washington. Mrs. Horace H. (Miss Annie) Smith (standing center) vividly recounts the history plus ghost stories to a recent group of tourists as she serves them gingerbread. Miss Marjorie Pierson, hostess, (seated front table right) saves the kitchen for the finale of the tour. Also lending a helping hand is Mrs. Mennis L. Gibson, the association's first vice president, passing gingerbread at the far table

MISS ANNIE, who never meets a stranger, points out the famous white carved "Aesop Mantel," planned by George Washington for the "Great Room" in the Kenmore mansion at Fredericksburg, Va. Depicting the table of the "Fox and Crow," it was designed as a warning to the Lewis children, "Beware of Flattery." As she describes the beauties of the mantel, she embraces Peggy Joe McIntyre while Gail McIntyre raptly listens. On the opposite side Miss Marjorie Pierson (center) Kenmore hostess, and tourists Mr. and Mrs. Thomas G. McIntyre of Richmond, Va., beam approval of their enthusiastic guide

Personal Power Preserved a National Shrine

'Miss Annie's' Boundless Energy, Zeal And Persuasion Rescued Kenmore

By Genevieve Reynolds

A TRAIN conductor at the Fredericksburg, Va., station shouted "all aboard."

"Hold that train, please," cried a plump, black-haired woman with twinkling brown eyes. "I'm teaching this man American history."

About 10 minutes later, the conductor good-naturedly inquired, "Have you finished, Miss Annie?"

"Yes," she replied. "I think you were wonderful to do that for me," adding, happily, "See, the man gave me a dollar for Kenmore."

The Polish immigrant, who had come to this country carrying his belongings in a small sack on his back, returned to the seat he had shared with the five-foot-three, dynamic woman. He waved goodby until his coach disappeared down the tracks.

Since that day some 20 years ago, Mrs. Horace H. Smith, known throughout Virginia and a large part of the globe as "Miss Annie," has garnered approximately $500,000 to save, to restore and to maintain historic Kenmore—the ancestral home of Betty Washington and Col. Fielding Lewis. Moreover, she has imbued thousands with her own love for the Old Dominion State and Kenmore history, which she reels off with the fluency of a tourist guide.

Col. Lewis, a Revolutionary patriot, built the colonial mansion in 1732 for his young bride, Betty, only sister of George Washington. Toward the end of the Revolution he mortgaged the house and 863 acres of land to equip three regiments and to build a vessel, The Dragon.

As Miss Annie told 60,000 World War II servicemen who visited the historic shrine before they departed for far flung battlefields, "So we would not be American citizens if it were not for Kenmore, which was sacrificed to make the guns for the army, which won the battle of Yorktown."

Apparently several thousand GIs remembered Miss Annie's history talks as well as the free chicken dinners she served them in her own home. Each week brings another announcemet that a serviceman has named his baby either Annie or Annie Kenmore. But as Mrs. Smith puts it, "The traffic is getting a little too heavy now to send presents to all of them as I started out doing."

The day she buried her only son, Horace Smith jr., she concealed her deep grief and entertained a group of servicemen. For her continuous unselfish war work Miss Annie was awarded the Good Neighbor Orchid by a Hollywood radio program and was named "War Mother of Fredericksburg."

Campaign To Save Kenmore

MISS ANNIE and her mother, the late Mrs. V. M. Fleming, are credited with saving Kenmore. Three previous attempts by the local citizenry had failed.

Following Colonel Lewis' death, Kenmore was sold for taxes. In the intervening years it was owned by private families, used as a hospital in the Civil War, and served as a boarding house in World War I. In 1922 the house was slated for demolition, the grounds to become apartment lots.

It was then Miss Annie's mother, a Virginia historian, called her daughter and declared, "I am old and deaf, but I would die happy if Kenmore could be saved."

"Well, come on mother and let's try to do it," replied the then 41-year-old Miss Annie.

That afternoon she and her mother rounded up 10 women, collected $1 toward the project and raised several hundred dollars worth of enthusiasm. A few days later, with 15 women, the two formed a DAR chapter for the sole purpose of saving Kenmore to the tune of $30,000, with $10,000 of the amount to be raised within four months.

Miss Annie and Mrs. Edward Birkhead came to Washington to see if the Daughters of the American Revolution would take over. With indignation Miss Annie recalls, "The DAR didn't know what Kenmore was. However, we ob-

Mildred, raised in the Fleming-Smith household kitchen in Fredericksburg, Va., has been Kenmore's chief gingerbread cook for seven years. She joined the late Mrs. V. M. Fleming's kitchen staff 40 years ago

"I COULDN'T accomplish anything without the Kenmore Association's regents and local board," emphasizes "Miss Annie" Smith as she opens a brief conference in the famous Kenmore library with three other officials. In the group are (left to right) Mrs. Mennis L. Gibson, first vice president; Mrs. L. F. Pierson, office secretary; Mrs. Smith, national executive secretary, and Miss Martha McCue, hostess

Diplomatic Circling

By Elizabeth Maguire

THE AMBASSADOR OF ECUADOR, Augusto Dillon, has a grandmother, Senora Victoria de Valdez, age 95, who up till a few years ago shopped annually in Paris. At her home in Guayaquil, Ecuador, Senora de Valdez still gives weekly luncheon parties, entertaining from 18 to 25 at a time. Guests arrive at 1 o'clock and it is nearly 5 when the last has said goodby.

Senora Maria de Dillon, the Ambassador's mother, is now visiting at the Embassy, and Senora de Dillon, the Ambassador's beautiful wife, has just returned from a visit to Paris. Unsurpassed food is served at Senora de Dillon's parties, and there is something about her leisurely quiet manner that makes everyone forget the element of time.

ALFRED STIRLING, Australian High Commissioner in South Africa, was enthusiastically welcomed last week when he came to fetch his sister, Miss Dorothy Stirling, and his mother, Mrs. Robert Stirling, to take them back with him to Capetown. The three sailed yesterday from New York on a nonstop voyage of 17 days. Mr. Stirling is former Minister to Washington, and his many friends hope they'll see him posted here again.

Australians have a simplicity and forthrightness which makes them very popular with Americans. Parties given by the Ambassador and Mrs. Makin are always a sure success. When they entertained last Wednesday for Mr. Stirling, even the soaring temperatures couldn't keep people away.

TWO EMINENT PERSONS from Saudi-Arabia are expected in town this week—Sheikhs Mohamed Ali-Radea Aliraza and Almed Aliraza. At home the Sheikhs are agents for the Ford Co. It seems that 90% of the Arabians have turned their camels in for Fords.

AS FAR AS NAMES GO, Burmese are the most individual. Family names do not exist. Wives and husbands have different names and so have all the children. To further confuse things, any name can be changed by a simple announcement in a newspaper. Bu Set Kya, aide to General Ne Win, who visited here last week, chose U Aung Than as his military name. Needless to say, dinner lists in local columns differed somewhat.

THE URUGUAYAN AMBASSADOR to OAS and Senora de Mora have gone to northern New York where they are placing their daughter, Susana, in a summer camp.

THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR and Lady Franks will return from London on the first of August. After a month's visit at Nantucket, they will return to Washington to prepare for the early fall visit of Sir Stafford Cripps.

MISS HILDA VALLARINO, daughter of the former Ambassador of Panama to Washington, J. J. Vallarino and Senora de Vallarino, is visiting with her parents in California.

Mrs. Tom Clark Sure She's a Capitalite Now

By Marie McNair

MRS. TOM CLARK, wife of President Truman's choice for the Supreme Court seat, feels she can really settle down now and call Washington home. "And there have been times—" she said, referring presumably to the stories going the rounds not long ago that her husband would resign his Cabinet post.

The prospective Supreme Court wife will find herself, I believe, the youngest. She's extremely pretty, too, with a Dresden-like daintiness. The right shade of blue will make her eyes bluer, her skin whiter. She has worn her light brown hair the same way—a soft wave—ever since she's been in Washington, which is just a dozen years; 12 years, which, she says, have been stimulating ones.

Mimi, 16-year-old daughter of the house, has two more years at Holton Arms School before she'll be of debutante age. Ramsay, the Clark's only son, went home to Texas to pick a bride. He and Georgia Welch of Corpus Christi were married there last April.

With Congress staying on and other developments in affairs of state to keep him here, the Attorney General hasn't yet found time for a summer holiday. But Mrs. Clark is hoping they'll all get a trip to California before the Supreme Court convenes October 1.

It's more than likely that when Mrs. Clark moves out and up from the role of Cabinet lady, her place will be filled by Mrs. J. Howard McGrath, wife of the Senator from and former Governor of Rhode Island.

Quiet, diffident, with brown eyes that twinkle on occasion, Mrs. McGrath first came to Washington four years ago when her husband was named Solicitor General. They're living in the same house on Chesapeake st. that they had then, and David, only son, is now 12.

Mrs. McGrath is a firm believer that "woman's place is in the home." She's proud of her husband, naturally enough, but she's content to let him take the spotlight.

TOWN TOPICS.

Wedding bells will ring soon for Mrs. Frances Kirby-Smith and Col. Wlodzimierz Onacewicz, former Military Attache of the Polish Embassy. Colonel Onacewicz—Butch to his friends—couldn't string along with the postwar Polish regime so he resigned his post. He will get his citizenship papers—by special act of Congress—about the time he applies for his marriage license.

Since renouncing allegiance to his native land Colonel Onacewicz has been working at the Library of Congress.

Capt. and Mrs. Robert Allan Dyer will have their daughter, Elenita

Recalling That Her Childhood Was Spoiled By Family Teasing, Mother Asks How to Block The Teasing Now Aimed at Her Small Daughter

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: For the good of my 5-year-old daughter and myself, I want to know how to deal with uncomplimentary remarks that are made about one's physical appearance or emotional behavior that can't be helped.

We were visiting my family recently and Dan—I shall call him—harked back to some unflattering remarks that he used to tease me with when I was a child. I was too young then to distinguish between humor and seriousness, and being sensitive I took his "teasing" very much to heart and many tears were shed.

Because of that I think I lost confidence in myself and acquired an inferiority complex. My parents were no help to me; in fact, most of the time they were the instigators of all this. Perhaps they thought I would toughen up and not be so sensitive if I received enough criticism; but I feel it is wrong to shame a child as a means of trying to teach ideal behavior.

She Sees Nothing Funny in Teasing

NOW THE FAMILY is making similar remarks to my daughter, who is a very beautiful child and exceptionally well behaved and admired by everyone who sees her. I rose instantly to Ann's defense when I heard Dan teasing her; and of course he explained that it was supposed to be "in fun," but I couldn't see anything funny about it, and I told him he wouldn't like it if I should talk that way to his children.

I feel very angry about it, because I know how it affected me in childhood, so kindly let me know how to handle such things in future. L. S.

Mother Must Rise to Mature Attitude

DEAR L. S.: You are still reacting childishly to Dan's teasing, past and present; and growing up psychologically is principally a matter of learning to leave childish reactions behind.

However, I grant you that teasing isn't funny. Actually it's never meant to be. It is a cover-up of hostile desire to "tear to pieces" (Webster's definition), whenever it takes a satirical, scoffing or taunting turn, allegedly humorous.

Where sympathetic fondness exists in personal relationships, only kindly raillery (if any) is used; and then of a type which pats the subject on the back, by spotlighting talents or accomplishments, instead of making mock, as Dan seems to do.

Dan's rehash of yesteryear's goat-getting gibes at you, casually translated into teasing of Ann, is childish, too,—in fact, a "slip" of the unconscious, a return to grudge-bearing behavior he practiced in childhood when he was gnawed by jealous, resentful, competitive feelings about you. I should surmise that your pride in Ann and her many charms stirs this reaction in him again.

Try Slow-Motion Reaction to Digs

HOW TO COPE? In adult exchange, ease in the face of unkind behavior turns it aside; and fortunately for Ann, you are prepared to shield her from Dan's barbs, so that she need never suffer as you did, with your parents on his "side."

Learn to keep cool and calmly examine Dan's attitude when he jibes, without getting emotionally involved—in terms of agitated kickback, I mean. This is using your head, acquiring "presence of mind," which in turn affords an oasis of poise from which to respond with mature composure—the magic silencer of sportive digs.

In his thoughtful book, "Look Eleven Years Younger," Gelett Burgess seriously recommends the slow-motion reaction to difficult moments, and calls it the foundation of social grace and personal force. So, for example, smile inattentively when Dan needles you; and if and when he picks on Ann, move in casually, gather her up, and sing her praises, laughing at him as you tote her away. M. H.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Washington Post.

Kids Cooking

Cooking is a lot of fun even for the smaller folks in the family. Indeed, it may be a good deal more fun for them than for mom, who has to do it morning, noon, and night. Not too many parents encourage their youngsters to find the satisfaction there is in "messing around" in the kitchen. Yet cooking can be as creative as drawing, playing the piano, or modeling in clay.

Here are a couple of simple things at which the beginner can try her (or his) hand. They are especially good for hot weather.

Banana Milk Shake—six servings: 4 ripe bananas, 1 quart chilled milk, 2 tablespoons sugar, ½ teaspoon vanilla, a few grains of salt. Cut up bananas into large bowl. Whip with egg beater until smooth and creamy. Add slowly the other ingredients. Beat until well blended. Serve in tall glasses.

Gelatin Lollipops: Use one of the gelatin mixtures found in every grocery store. Use jigger glasses or small jar lids as molds. Fill them with plain liquid gelatine and place in an empty freezing tray in the refrigerator. When the gelatin begins to thicken, insert a matchstick or toothpick as a handle. Freeze until firm and remove by running a knife around the edges.

Don'ts for Housewives

Don't dry clean in the house.

Don't leave the children locked in the house and go visiting.

Don't forget to dry the family tooth brushes in the sun one day a week.

Don't let the children be wasteful with electricity and leave the lights burning all over the house. Teach them to turn them off when leaving a room.

Dick Skinner's Goldfish Are Named After Big Stars

Batt, with them this week. Elenita is coming from Boston where she's been living with her handsome husband, Colonel Batt. Jim Batt will bring the car down the following week and the pair will set off from here on the second lap of their vacation.

Those goldfish swimming about in a tank at Dick Skinner's house at Olney Theater, were a housewarming gift to the producer from William H. Putch. They were handpicked by Mr. Putch, each because of its resemblance to one of the stars who has played there this season. The liveliest one has been named Tallulah Bankhead; the pale silver one is named for blond Leon Janney, and Viola Roach is languid, full bodied. The tiny dark fish, graceful and streamlined, is Sylvia Sidney.

Blonde and beautiful Anita Page of film fame—she's Mrs. Herchel House—is to leave soon for Canada with Captain House, who will take over liaison duties with the Royal Canadian Navy Air Staff. The Houses have been living quietly in nearby Falls Church, Va., with Kleig lights and Hollywood sets seeming far, far away. Before they start for their new post, however, Captain and Mrs. House will take a trip to California to visit Mrs. House's family.

Senorita Anita Ramirez, First Secretary of the Panama Embassy, is a first rate salesman as well as an ace diplomat. On Panama's coastal resorts, she says, it never gets higher than 85, there's no humidity and the breezes from the two oceans sweep over the land.

Piece By Piece, the Profit Goes

Guests' Taking Ways Expensive to Innkeepers

NICE WORK . . . Says Dick Treadway as wife Martha models waitress uniform she designed. It's all part of the Treadways' plan to keep guests at their inn at Sturbridge, Mass., happy. Dick runs the office and Martha directs the housekeeping

When you register at a hotel or a tourist cabin on vacation, remember that you are not on a scavenger hunt. Some people apparently think the furnishings of their rented abodes are souvenirs.

Martha and Richard Treadway, a young couple who operate several inns in New England, found that this attitude can be a major problem.

It is Martha's job in their hotel partnership to take care of the guests' comfort—she decorates the rooms, provides the flowers and other doodads, designs colorful uniforms for the help besides managing her four children, all under 9 years of age. She says:

"Souvenir hunters keep one step ahead of me all the time. I just about think I have the place looking pretty and attractive when pouf . . . the ivy is lifted from the pots, my collection of pewter goes piece by piece, two Staffordshire vases are taken out of the sitting room.

"You expect the usual run of missing silver, towels, bath mats, lamps, curtains, draperies and bedspreads, but when a picture 28 inches in diameter is taken from the walls and smuggled out it is a little confusing."

Inn keepers always expect to lose ashtrays, she says. But the Treadways bought theirs bigger and bigger each time, hoping that soon they would reach a "safe size." Finally, they imported some huge fruit bowls to be used as ashtrays—but they also disappeared.

Don't get the Treadways wrong. They really love the hotel business. Dick has been well schooled, having started as a bellboy in 1930, while attending prep school, and working in every capacity in the kitchen from baker's helper to vegetable and fry cook. Today he manages several of his father's 14 hotels.

He says there is such a thing as a perfect guest. If you want to leave a good impression at an inn or hotel, here are a few of his suggestions:

1. Take advantage of services offered by the hotel or inn without expecting the impossible.

2. Towels shouldn't be used to shine shoes.

3. Learn to control your own children so they are not pests to other guests.

4. Radios shouldn't be played late at night when other guests are trying to sleep.

5. Don't take everything that isn't nailed down.

Dick doesn't try to shirk his own responsibilities. He knows that guests can be made very uncomfortable by careless management and he really aims to please. He says:

"Simple thing such as the proper placing of tables in the dining room so that guests are not left at floater tables in the middle of the room, can add to the guests' comfort."

He tries to make dining rooms cozy, anchors tables near walls, pillars or windows, keeps the lights low and cuts up any large room with screens, fences or large plants. He "doesn't fawn on guests" inquiring how they like their consomme or dessert or pursue them in any other fashion, but he gives them an idea that he is a friend who welcomes their constructive criticism, any time it is offered, he says.

Miss Priscilla Marbury Wed to William F. Ryan

MISS PRISCILLA WORTHINGTON MARBURY and William Fitts Ryan were married yesterday in Trinity Church, Upper Marlboro, the Rev. Curtis Draper, jr., officiating. The bride is the daughter of Judge and Mrs. Charles Clagett Marbury of Upper Marlboro, and her husband is the son of Judge and Mrs. Bernard Ryan, of Albion, N. Y.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white Chantilly lace over white satin, and a veil of white illusion held in place by a coronet of seed pearls. Her flowers were a bouquet of white roses and bouvardia.

Miss Valerie Marbury Barroll of Baltimore was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Elizabeth Crist of Indianapolis, Ind.; Miss Josephine Slingluff Hall, Miss Helen Bowling Hereford, Miss Leslie Ann Smith and Miss Sally Chew Zantzinger, all of Upper Marlboro; Miss Cynthia Lovejoy of Detroit, Mich.; Miss Jenny Esther Vorys of Columbus, Ohio, and Mrs. Bernard Ryan, jr., of Rochester, N. Y.

Bernard Ryan, jr., acted as best man for his brother. Ushering were Hewitt Fitts Ryan, Leonard Eames Ryan, brothers of the bridegroom; Scott Heuer, jr., of St. Louis, Mo.; James Hill of Glenvil, Conn.; Dr. Thomas McMillan 3d, of Philadelphia; Edwin H. Shafer 2d, of Brackney, Pa.; David Chew Stephenson of Germantown, Pa., and Harris B. Stewart, jr., of Aurora, N. Y.

After a wedding trip to Canada, Mr. and Mrs. Ryan will make their home in New York City.

AS EVERY phase of dance is studied at the Dance Masters Convention, Miss Cunningham spends an hour or more going over new ballroom steps with her partner, Archibald McGlasson, a senior at Maryland University. Mr. McGlasson attended Miss Cunningham's coming out party June 15 as well as every other debut of the season. He says it's the hardest work there is

Chic Danseuse

SHE can dance on her toes, twirl a baton and glide through waltzes. But dancing is a hobby, while prelaw studies at Rosemont College are serious business. Miss Joan Cunningham, daughter of Mrs. James J. Cunningham and the late Commander Cunningham, made her debut in June at a tea dance at the Shoreham. She will return to Rosemont College in the fall as a sophomore.

Miss Cunningham is spending the summer in Washington, and when she heard the Dance Masters of America were holding classes at the Shoreham she went over to pick up a step or two. Their energetic schedule from 10 to 9 she found was aircooled in the hotel ballroom.

Normal School of the Dance Masters ran from July 25 through July 29. Classes, comprised of dancing teachers from all over the country, included new steps and new techniques. Classes in adcanced dancing will be given at the convention opening today and continuing through August 6.

Archibald McGlasson, a senior at Maryland University, escorted Miss Cunningham on her excursion to Normal School, and together they rehearsed new numbers. Mr. McGlasson is a tireless dancer, last season attending every debut in town.

Proper Use Enhances Silver

It's a wonderful paradox that nothing preserves sterling silver like constant use, says the August issue of Charm, the magazine for the business girl. In the same way as do fine woods and real pearls, sterling silver develops a patina, a lovely luster, in the wear and handling.

Wash silver as soon after meals as possible, because there are some foods—notably eggs—which leave marks on flatware. Salt makes tiny black pits in silver, so brush your sterling salt shakers extra carefully after each meal. Don't rub them, or random salt grains may become imbedded. Line your sterling bonbon dishes with doilies before you use them to serve salted nuts.

Between meals, store silver in a wooden chest which is lined with nontarnish cloth. Or, line a drawer in your dining-room sideboard or kitchen cabinet with a half-yard of nontarnish silver cloth.

Miss Mittleman to Marry Mr. Mazer

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice H. Jacoby announce the engagement of their niece, Miss Lucille Mittleman, to Bernard Mazer, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Mazer of Baltimore. The wedding will take place in the fall.

Miss Mittleman attended Susquehanna University and was graduated from George Washington University.

Fowlers Visit Rehoboth

Dr. and Mrs. Henry T. Fowler of Washington were weekend guests here last weekend. Dr. Fowler, who is a world-wide traveler as an industrial psychologist with the World Trade Council, came to Rehoboth as guest speaker before the Sussex Gardeners Club, on invitation of the club president, Mrs. William W. Fisher, of Cedarcroft near Lewes.

In Readiness for Guests

If possible, keep a can of fruit cocktail, one of fruit salad and several cans of fruit juices on the lower shelf of your refrigerator at all times. Then you are entirely prepared to add a course to your dinner when unexpected guests arrive. Many times, they will sound good to you as you are preparing dinner and you will be so glad they are chilled and ready for serving.

Miss Dos Santos Is Married

Miss Marina dos Santos, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Salathiel dos Santos of New York and Brazil, and Luiz Octavio Parente de Mello, Third Secretary of the Brazilian Embassy, were married yesterday morning in the Chapel of the Apostolic Delegation. The ceremony was performed by His Excellency Amleto Cicognani, Archbishop of Laudiccea, Apostolic Delegate.

The bride, attended by her father, wore a bouffant white lace gown and a lace cap held her full tulle veil. Her attendants were Miss Carrol Smith, and Miss Elise Wentworth.

Carlos C. de Mello was best man for his brother and ushers were Salathiel dos Santos, jr.; Antonio Castello-Branco, Second Secretary of the Brazilian Embassy; Jorge C. Silva, and Joao Paulo do Rio-Branco.

The bride atended the Gardner School and was graduated in June from Finch Junior College. Mr. de Mello studied at the Jesuits Santo Inacio school in Rio and was graduated in 1946 from the University of Brazil law school.

A wedding breakfast was held at the Shoreham Hotel following the ceremony.

Rehoboth to Vote On August 13

Rehoboth Beach is already deep in the throes of selecting candidates for the forthcoming municipal election on August 13. As three of the town commissioners must be chosen from among summer property owners living out of the State, the whole resort colony takes the annual elections as part of its summer vacationing experience. Old-fashioned town meetings have been held to nominate candidates. For mayor the only nominee so far has been Mr. J. Arthur Downing, a former mayor for ten years. Tonight is the deadline for candidates to file, and just now it is not yet known whether the incumbent, Col. Carleton B. Shaffer, will go out for re-election for his third term.

Koones Family At Rehoboth Beach

Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Koones of Bethesda, Md., their sons, Charles, jr., and Tony, and Mrs. Koone's mother are now occupying the Koones' cottage in Henlopen Acres.

Not Too Early

It is nice to have dinner ready just as soon as the family is home, but do not start the green vegetables so early that they must simmer in the water when all ready to serve. It takes away their delicate flavor and some of the food value as well.

Baked in Paper

Many cooks find a cake easier to remove from the pan if baked in greased paper within the pan, but if you are trying it for the first time be sure to remove that paper as soon as the cake comes from the oven. If it cools on the cake, it is bound to stick.

Taylor Caldwell Puts Hero Choice Up to Readers

According to Taylor Caldwell, author of "Let Love Come Last," (Scribner's; $3), a Literary Guild Selection for August, there are no villains in life or in realistic literature. "Villains and heroes," says Miss Caldwell, "are frequently interchangeable, depending upon personal viewpoint."

Miss Caldwell lets the characters in her books "mold" the plot. She never makes blueprints for, in the few cases in which she has tried to, she has found that the characters themselves change it and turn it into something entirely different.

"All my characters at all times are based on actual people," says Miss Caldwell, "but they are always changed and so become a composite. William Prescott, for instance, in 'Let Love Come Last' is a composite of at least half a dozen fathers I know, each with his special problem with regard to his children."

Make a Mix-Match

By Peggy Preston

WITH a month of dog days still ahead of us, it's a crying shame what's happened to our summer wardrobe. The humidity and heat have played havoc with our once-sprightly cottons and shantungs, and we're stranded in mid-season with clothes as wilted as our disposition.

We'd like to remedy the situation, but with as little cost as possible to our pocketbook and energy. Any sizable outlay of cash we might make in the near future will be for a fall suit or coat, and a few hoarded pennies are all we are prepared to pay for sprucing up our current wardrobe.

So it is with glee that one notes those bright spots on the horizon—the clearance sales, offering tasty mark-downs on summer stocks. Better still, for the budget-minded Miss who is handy with a needle, are the reduced prices on yardgoods. With the help of a well styled pattern she can turn out a new dress at a minimum of cost and labor, one that will see her neatly through the long, hot weeks until Labor Day.

Pictured on this page are two outfits, made from Simplicity patterns, that will be especially useful to you if you plan a vacation during August. One is a three-piece frock, with skirt, blouse and bolero for traveling; the other is a playsuit, with strapless top and cuffed shorts.

They may be made of cotton, rayon or silk, but we recommend that they both be of the same fabric, since this carries out the "mix-match" idea that is smart fashion today. If you care to add a full-length evening skirt to this collection, you have a bright, new six-piece wardrobe to take along on your holiday.

This notion of interchangeable items can be fun, too, if you like clothes with imagination. For instance, you can wear the strapless, camisole top with the street skirt on evenings when you are party-bound; the scoop-necked, sleeveless blouse and long skirt for a dance; the short skirt and blouse for town; the bolero as a little evening jacket, or for wear with shorts when lunching at a boardwalk restaurant, or on a hotel terrace.

It is estimated that 13 yards of fabric will make the six pieces. If you pay, say $1 per yard, you see what a bargain you will be getting.

For your August holiday make yourself a "mix-match" series of outfits. Choose a featherweight fabric of cotton, silk or rayon and cut out the three pieces above from Simplicity Printed patterns. Skirt and scoop-necked blouse are No. 2567, sizes 12 to 20; bolero is No. 2780

Blessed ole' King Sol looks a lot better in the country than in the city these days, and so will you in a cunning strapless top and cuffed shorts made of the same fabric as your travel costume. Top is Simplicity Printed pattern, No. 2860, sizes 11 to 18; shorts are No. 2567, sizes 12 to 20. A full length evening skirt will give you a total of six pieces, all interchangeable

Public May See Chase House August 10

Annapolis, Md., July 30.—The lovely old garden of the Chase home, where 150 years ago the author of this country's national anthem courted his lady love, will be open to the public—a rare event—on August 10.

The occasion of its opening will be a garden sale of furniture from Chase home storage and from other old homes in the West River section and throughout Anne Arundel County. The proceeds from this furniture and from attractive china, glassware, bric-a-brac and home produce, will go to restore the furnishings of the Chase home.

Acting as hostesses for the occasion, which will begin at 2 p. m. and feature tea in the garden, will be the 13 women of the Episcopal Church, who are now making their home in the stately Colonial mansion.

The Misses Dorothy and Jean Cartwright Lane, daughters of the Governor of Maryland, and Mrs. William Preston Lane, jr., left last week with friends to motor to the West Coast.

Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., superintendent of the Naval Academy and Mrs. Holloway, entertained Rear Admiral John W. Roper, deputy chief of naval personnel, and Mrs. Roper at luncheon last Saturday at the Superintendent's quarters, prior to the final matches of the All-Navy tennis tournament. Admiral Roper made the presentation of awards at the conclusion of the tournament.

On Monday of this week, Admiral and Mrs. Holloway left for two weeks' leave at their home in Arlington.

Thirty-one of the Navy's top-flight tennis players participated in the play for singles and doubles tennis crowns in the All-Navy tennis tournament at the Naval Academy. The players were selected from the Pacific Fleet, Atlantic Fleet, and East and West Coast shore establishments.

Representing the Severn River Naval Command were Ensigns Leonard F. Vogt, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Horace P. Fishman, of Philadelphia. Ensign Fishman has been named as one of the 12 members of the Navy Leech Trophy tennis team. Ensign Fishman was graduated from the Naval Academy last June and at present is on duty in the department of physical training at the Naval Academy. The Navy team for the Leech tennis match with the Army and Air Force was selected on the basis of individual performance in the All-Navy tournament. The Leech Trophy matches are being held in Washington July 29-30.

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Miss Dorothy Alice Arnold, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Louis F. Arnold, of Westgate, to Ensign Jack Wilbur Rupe, USN, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Rupe of Seattle, Wash.

The bride-elect is a graduate of Western High School, and the Bard Avon School, Baltimore. Ensign Rupe was graduated from the Naval Academy in June.

Plans have been made for an August wedding in San Diego, Calif.

The announcement has been made by Mr. and Mrs. Philip Hess, of Sparrow Point, of the engagement of their daughter, Mary Geraldine Hess, to Midshipman William Gordon Petty, son of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Petty, of Norfolk, Va. Miss Hess is a graduate of Mercy Hospital School of Nursing. The couple plan to be married next June, following Midshipman Petty's graduation from the Naval Academy.

Dr. and Mrs. Vladimir Zworykin, of Princeton, N. J., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Elaine V. Zworykin, to Lieut. (jg) Louis B. Knudsen, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Knudsen, of Fort Lupton, Colo.

The wedding will take place on September 17.

Miss Zworykin was graduated from Pasadena Junior College in California and from the University of Illinois. She is a mineralogist with the United States Geological Survey in Washington.

Lieutenant Knudsen, a graduate of the Naval Academy in the class of 1944, is now on duty in the Navy Department, Washington.

Capt. and Mrs. Robert S. Quackenbush, jr., of 19 Northwest st., Annapolis, had as a guest recently, Lieut. (j.g.) Patrick Gowan, who flew here from China, where he has been on duty. Other house guests of the Quackenbushes included Lieut. and Mrs. Lewis Tuttle and their daughter, Maggie, who were en route to the officer's new duty in Norfolk, Va.

Capt. Joseph Elliott Austin, of the 1908 class at the Naval Academy, was a guest during the past week of Capt. and Mrs. E. R. Morrissey. Captain Austin was former operations manager of the Inter-Island Steamship Co. of Honolulu, and has spent the last year at Manila, in the Philippines. He left here for his new home in Rowden, Canada.

Prepare Hair For Home Permanent

If a home permanent is on your schedule be sure to condition your hair first. Take a couple of weeks. Brush, brush, brush—morning and night. It stimulates the scalp and makes hair healthy and shining. Decide on your hair style and have it trimmed and shaped by a professional. They know how to make both sides come out even! Give yourself a hot oil shampoo. Heat the oil slightly and with handy cotton squares rub it gently into your scalp. As the cotton square becomes soiled, use a fresh one. Allow the oil to "soak" for a few minutes. Then shampoo, using two lathers and several rinsings. Read your home permanent directions thoroughly before you begin. Handy cotton squares are ideal for applying permanent lotions, too.

Panamanian Visitors

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morrice, jr., of Panama are guests of the Panamanian Ambassador and Senora de Vallarino. Mrs. Morrice is the daughter of former Ambassador Enrique Jimenez of Panama, who also served recently as President of Panama.

Rehoboth Roundup

Vacationists Move Over TheNationalGuard'sHere

By Virginia Cullen

Rehoboth Beach, Del., July 30.—Summer vacationists will have to move over today to make room for the Army.

Arriving today from all over Delaware and parts of Maryland and Pennsylvania are some 1500 National Guardsmen who will be stationed at nearby Fort Miles for the annual encampment of Delaware's 198th AAA group. They will be around here until August 13, furnishing plenty of uniformed escorts for the resort fair sex on their free evenings. The high brass has decreed that included in this year's encampment will be an elaborate recreation program for the personnel that will give them full advantage of vacation facilities at the seashore.

Twenty-five officers of the Delaware ORC will train with the AAA group, as well as ORC men from Maryland and Eastern Pennsylvania, a total of 150. Holding the encampment at Fort Miles, just a stone's throw over the sand dunes of Cape Henlopen from this resort, is something new this year. This Regular Army post, a product of World War II, is the only one in this part of the State. In former years the encampment was held at Bethany Beach, 18 miles to the south of Rehoboth. It gets a new name each year. The 1949 encampment has been dubbed "Camp Elbert N. Carvel," in honor of Governor Carvel, who is technically commander-in-chief of the Delaware National Guard.

The men in uniform will arrive just in time for the biggest weekend attraction—the preliminaries tonight at the Rehoboth ball park to select Delaware's representative in the "Miss Junior Miss of America" national contest. The finals will be next Saturday. Besides, they get to see two baseball games in the Eastern Shore League that follow the girl shows. Governor Carvel and his staff have accepted invitations to be present.

A group of Washington girls were entertained at a house party on Indian Beach by the Misses Sandy and Judy Whitlock, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Whitlock of Washington. They were Diane Farquarson, Beverly Young, Pamela Matthews, Gene Greear, and Chantry Porter. The Whitlocks' weekend guests were also Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Yoder and Mr. Louis Tirrell of Washington, and arriving on Tuesday were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mortensen of Alexandria, Va., and Mr. and Mrs David Miller of Pennsylvania.

One of Rehoboth's largest summer homes, owned by the Walter J. Lairds of Wilmington, will be occupied for the month of August by Mr. and Mrs. William Bostian of Washington.

Mrs. Neil MacDonald of Washington, spent this week at her cottage, "Henlopen Half-Acre," and had with her Mrs. John Halla of Washington, wife of General Halla of the United States Marine Corps.

Miss Catherine Nash of Washington, is vacationing at The Corner Cupboard Inn in the pines section.

Guests here for ten days of Col. and Mrs. Wilbur S. Corkran, at The Homestead, are Mr. and Mrs. James R. Robb of Philadelphia. Miss Mary Louise Speed of Louisville, Ky., arrives August 2 to be the guest of the Corkrans for several weeks, during which she will give three weekly lectures before the Garden Course class of the Rehoboth Art League, beginning August 3.

A tea and private viewing Wednesday afternoon in the boardwalk clubhouse of the Village Improvement Association, inaugurated the association's twenty-first annual art exhibition. The tea was for exhibiting artists, club members and their guests. The show will be open to the public daily until August 21, except Wednesdays, with afternoon visiting hours from 2 to 5 o'clock, and from 7 to 10 Sunday evenings.

Leesburg News Notes

Mary Gardner, H. T. Plaster, Jr., Feted

Leesburg, Va., July 30.—A party, announcing the engagement of Miss Mary Ann Gardner, of Haymarket, and Hubert Taliaferro Plaster, jr., of Leesburg and Washington, was given Saturday evening by Miss Gardner's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Martin, at their home near Hamilton. Miss Gardner is the daughter of Mrs. Walter Gardner of Haymarket, and the late Mr. Gardner. Mr. Plaster is the son of Hubert T. Plaster of Williamsburg, and the late Mrs. Henrietta B. Plaster. He served in World War II, with the Third Army and saw two years' service in Germany, where he was awarded the Purple Heart.

The Wedding will take place August 6, in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, with the Rev. W. F. Carpenter officiating. Miss Gardner's only attendant will be her sister, Mrs. Martin. Mr. Plaster will have for his best man Alfred L. B. di Zerega 3d of Leesburg, and the ushers will be A. T. Elgin 3d, Ross H. Lipscomb, and George E. Ward, jr.

Mr. Plaster is with the Air Force at the Pentagon Building and the couple will live in Arlington.

General and Mrs. George C. Marshall, who are at their home, Dodona Manor, Leesburg, will leave August 1 to spend a month at Saranac Lake, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Grant will leave next month for a trip to Guatemala.

The Rev. and Mrs. Alfred B. Seccombe have returned to Leesburg after visiting relatives in Baltimore. The Rev. Mr. Seccombe will leave Monday for his home in Carmel, Calif. His wife and three children will extend their visit for several weeks with Mrs. Seccombe's parents, the Rev. and Mrs. J. Armistead Welbourn, in Leesburg.

Mrs. Stirling M. Harrison and three daughters, Miss Nancy Hills Luke, and Sally Fendall and Elizabeth Harrison, returned to Leesburg on Monday from Ocean City, Md., where they were the guests of Mrs. William J. Cox. Commonwealth's Attorney Harrison joined his wife and family over the weekend, returning home with them. Mr. and Mrs. John William Clemens and three children and Mr. Clemens' mother, Mrs. John R. Clemens, have returned from a two-weeks' vacation at Bethany Beach. The Rev. and Mrs. J. Manly Cobb and three daughters will return the first of the week from Avalon, N. J., where they have been vacationing.

Mrs. Kelly Garges and her two children, Natalie and Douglas, who have been visiting her parents, Dr. and Mrs. G. Harry Musgrave, left Tuesday for their home in Atlanta, Ga.

Miss Kitty Clemens is vacationing at Fenwick Island, Delaware Beach, as the guest of her uncle and aunt, Col. and Mrs. A. L. Tynes. . . . Mrs. Ed Rakes and daughter, Miss Nancy Rakes, accompanied by Miss Betty Chamblin, are vacationing at Crystal Beach, Md.

The Woman's Auxiliary of St. James Episcopal Church are sponsoring their annual picnic supper, which will be held Friday afternoon, August 12, beginning at 5 o'clock on the lawn of Janelia Farms, home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Pickens.

Mr and Mrs. George C. Clarke entertained at dinner at Belmont on Wednesday evening when their guests included Congressman T. Millet Hand, Mrs. F. William Spang, Col. and Mrs. Milton K. Lockwood, Col Claire Hardy, Mrs. Kettle Hydrick, Mr. and Mrs. William Canby, Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Lisle A. Smith, Dr. and Mrs. Edgar Snowden, Miss Cynthia Hill and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin D. Hill, jr.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarke will leave next week for Saratoga, N. Y., to be present at the annual sales. They are offering three yearlings for sale on Tuesday evening, August 9. Others in this area offering yearlings at the famous sales are David N Rust, whose six yearlings will be put on the block on the evening of August 9; W. H. Lipscomb, whose four yearlings will be offered on August 10; Blue Ridge Farms' three will be sold on August 8; Mrs. G. P. Greenhalgh, with six, to offer on August 10; Kentmore Farms' seven to be offered on August 12, and Taylor Hardin's three on August 8.

Visit Granddaughter

The Minister Counselor of Peru and Senora de Aramburu are proud grandparents of an infant girl born recently in Mexico to their son-in-law and daughter, Senor and Senora de Olivares. Senora de Aramburu has just returned from a visit to see her new granddaughter.

Vacationing

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Reizenstein have left for Atlantic City, where they will spend the remainder of the summer at the Traymore.

Molly's Spurts to 'Phone Her Principal Exercise, Ida Jean Ruefully Notes

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

It's Ida Jean Kain in person, originator of the diet recently enjoyed by Mary Van Rensselear Thayer and thousands of Washington Post readers, who writes a guest column for Mrs. Thayer today. Ida Jean measures just a whiff over 5 feet, checks off her weight at 108. Keeping it there takes just as much will power for her as for anybody else, she claims.

By Ida Jean Kain

OUR DIET-DUET adventure was all Molly Thayer's idea. She was determined to depart from Washington 10 pounds lighter, and announced gaily via the telephone that she would like to be my "guinea pig"—giving the impression this was to be a well-controlled experiment. Well, it was and it wasn't.

IDA JEAN KAIN

The Washington Post columnist showed sheer genius in getting one and all to cooperate on the diet score. Hosts, hostesses, waiters, friends and casual acquaintances all came through. And she maneuvered adroitly on the exercises.

The exercise was Molly's idea, too. Personally, mild stretching and active swimming is my idea of exercise in hot weather. But our model decided to do this up brown, weather or no.

"Ah, fine," I thought, "a gal with rare determination."

I went down to Molly's house . . . it seemed easier. I thought if I had her safe at home, we could get on with the slimming. That's what I thought . . . but I had not reckoned with the telephone, or Molly's velleity. You might like to look in on a typical session . . .

Molly was on the telephone when I breezed in, slack-clad, set for action. She gaily chirped into the phone: "Oh, we're to do our exercises now"—as if she could hardly wait.

WELL, I don't quite know how it happened, but as it turned out Kain did most of the exercises.

"This slight bend whittles inches off the waist," I pointed out, bending east and west. "And this swing gets the hips . . . and this side circling slims thighs," I panted.

"Oh good!" cheered Molly, not budging . . . she was sipping iced tea. "Now show me one that puts some brace back in the middle muscles."

For this, I got down on the floor. Just as I was bringing knee to chest, the telephone rang . . .

"Oh hello," caroled Molly, "Ida Jean and I are taking our exercises . . . I've lost pounds . . . why, of course it shows . . ." and on and on.

I'd been through this before so I go into a comfortable position, the one that rests the back.

I decided it was high time Molly got into action. That didn't work. She insisted she could understand them so much better by watching me. Urging got me nowhere, so I used other tactics. I questioned her ability to do the stomach-flattener she boasted she took daily. It was the challenge that did it . . .

Certainly she could do it, she bristled, getting into position down on the floor. And she did, with the greatest of ease. Of course, I'm such a stickler for precision calisthenics that I had to point out that she was using the back muscles more than the girdle muscles. Molly took this to mean she had a fine, strong back, which she has—and plenty of backbone, too, I might add.

I decided to check on her favorite, and encouraged her to show me that one (feeling the need of a breather myself).

MOLLY WAS saved by the bell . . . the phone rang again. New York calling. I flattened out on the floor—might as well take the seventh inning stretch so Molly couldn't get me on the phone to assure her friends she really had lost.

Then Molly suggested that her daughter answer the phone, but Eugenia just turned out to be the middle-man . . . Molly cannot resist talking to anyone from anywhere. To save time she did tell her daughter, "That was the secretary on the line first—don't call me until the man comes on."

We had just gotten back at it when . . . Br-r-r-i-n-g. I decided this was where I came in, and dusting myself off waved goodbye.

The experiment, however, was a happy success. Molly stayed with the diet, slimmed off 8 pounds, and we're both mighty proud of her. Come fall, she wants to carry on. Fine—but there'll be some changes made. Next time the phone will be off the hook, Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer will be on the floor doing the exercises, and Kain will be sipping iced tea . . .

Philippines President To Visit Here

The President of the Philippines, Elpidio Quirino, will arrive in Washington on Monday, August 8. He will be greeted by the Ambassador of the Philippines, Joaquin Elizalde, and State Department officials. In a White House car, the Chief Executive of the Philippines will be driven to Blair House, where he will be over-night guest of President Truman. A state dinner will be given in his honor that evening at Blair House.

The following day, Tuesday, August 9, President Quirino will go to the Philippine Embassy to be the guest of Ambassador Elizalde for the remaining three days of his visit. On Tuesday evening President Quirino will give a stag dinner at the Statler in honor of President Truman. A reception will follow which ladies will attend as well. Host at the reception will be Ambassador Elizalde.

A luncheon will be given Wednesday at the Carlton for President Quirino by the United States Ambassador to the Philippines, Myron Cowen. On Wednesday afternoon there will be a reception at the Philippine Embassy in honor of the visiting President. Members of the Philippine colony will attend. President Quirino will leave Washington Thursday for New York, where entertainments will also be given in his honor.

Visiting Students To Be Honored At U. N. Club Dance

Honor guests at the United Nations Club dinner dance this evening will be some 20 young men now attending the student professors seminar group of the foreign service institute. The Sunday dinner dances are given weekly, co-chairmaned by Miss Peggy Smith and Miss Beverly Farrington.

Hosts and hostesses this evening will be Miss Mary-Stuart Price, Miss Alwilda Ferris, Jack Van Devanter and Berry Wallace. Preceding the dinner dance there will be an afternoon swimming party for club members and their guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. N. A. Gruman, 3520 Rittenhouse st.

Mme Rybar at Beach

Mme. Vladimir Rybar left yesterday for Rehoboth Beach, where she will spend 10 days. Her daughter, Mrs. Rowe Saltzman, and son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Geauque, will leave today for a visit in Alabama.

Run for Insurance; Ma's Driving

MY RECENT observations indicate that the most dangerous time to drive an automobile is between 9 a. m. and 4 p. m., Mondays through Fridays. This is the period when papa is working hard at the office and mama is out with the family car.

I've been doing some daytime driving lately and am on the verge of doubling my life insurance. I have been scared so often that I now get hysterical every time I see a lady behind a wheel. To further protect myself, I have recently added rear-view mirrors to each side of my car, an extra set of front and rear bumpers and a compass. You can never tell which direction the dear ladies are apt to come from or go to.

Women drivers readily fall into two classifications. There is the timid or "Millie the Meek" type, and the reckless or "Mabel the Terrible" driver. Millie is obviously scared of all the other cars on the road but Mabel, on the contrary, does her best to scare all the other cars.

You can spot Millie easily. She sits firmly against the seat, back straight, arms stiff and maintains a two-handed death grip on the wheel. She has a fixed, glassy stare in her eyes and always looks straight ahead. Never does she glance to the right or left. She might lose control of the car.

If Millie has a left turn to make in her journey, whether it be one block or 6 miles from the starting point, she immediately gets in the left lane and stays there. No amount of horn-blowing can move her. If the speed limit is 30 miles, she drives 20—you can't be too cautious, my dears, with all these speed demons about. If she is going to make a left turn at 14th st., she puts out her arm at 10th st. Sometimes she moves her arm up and down, sometimes waves it, and sometimes holds it perfectly still.

Millie will speed only on one occasion. That is when she approaches a traffic light real slow and cautious and just as it turns yellow, she steps on the gas. You didn't make the light.

Everyone has been scared by Mabel. She knows little about traffic regulations and cares less. In fact, she knows little about driving. The instructor could only take so much and graduated her early. Mabel is the kind of person who insists on playing every hand at the bridge table.

Mabel invariably takes another lady with her—a listener. She'll do the talking. En route she harangues her companion about the shortcomings of their neighbors—with gestures. Traffic is forgotten. She'll be in the left lane awhile, then the right lane, depending on which direction she is waving her arms. Sometimes she drives 15 miles per hour and sometimes 40. Place, time or conditions have no bearing on her speed—it all depends whether she is thinking up a new blast or emphasizing a point with her foot.

She is the kind who puts out her hand and immediately pulls out from the curb whether the street is clear or not. She put out her hand, didn't she? She makes right turns from the left lane, and left turns from the right lane. She decides her direction the instant she stops talking. And that nasty cop. She was going to report him. Being so sassy. Of course, she had to make that U-turn in the middle of the block. She just remembered that she forgot to turn out the fire under the beans.

Then there is the third or rare type of woman driver. The kind who can drive a car exactly right—or just like a man. In my entire lifetime I have known two: My wife's youngest sister, who lives in Oklahoma, and a country girl I used to know back home in Pennsylvania.

Neither of them can help me here. So I'm heading back to the "rush hour" where, man against man, I'll have an equal chance for survival.

TOM CULLEN.

About Golden Wedding Fete

I am interested in securing some suggestions (perhaps in booklet form) for a simple reception in celebration of a golden wedding anniversary. Do you have such a publication or can you tell me where I might find one. R. D. T.

You will find suggestions for a golden wedding anniversary tea or reception on page 146 of the Cokesbury Shower Book by Katherine Fite and Garland Clawson Paine (Abingdon, Cokesbury Press). Given in detail in the chapter are directions for making a "pot of gold at the end of a rainbow" to be used as the center decoration for the table. Also included is a suggested tea menu.

Do you know if home kits for assembling corsages are available here in Washington and where I might find one? I have been unable to locate any. J. McC.

I have not been able to find anyone who could give me specific information about these kits. Can any of our readers help J. McC.?

I have an oil painting that needs a little freshening up, both the picture and the gilt frame. Can you give me any information on how I can do this at home? I have called professional studios but their prices start at $10 and I do not feel the picture is of great enough value to warrant paying so much. C. M. C.

We do not usually give directions in this column for cleaning oil paintings, because cleaning valuable paintings successfully requires much knowledge and skill and should always be done by a professional. However, since you say the painting is not a valuable one and you do not wish to pay to have it cleaned, if you wish to take a chance on cleaning it yourself, here are some suggestions: Before starting to clean, rub a small spot in a corner with a damp cloth. If any paint at all is removed, you should not attempt to clean it. If, however, the paint resists water, rub a dampened soft cloth to a bar of mild soap and gently rub the painting in a circular motion. Use a minimum of water and work with fair haste so the moisture does not penetrate the edges or canvas. When you have gone over the entire surface with soap, wipe soil and soapy water away with a clean damp cloth. Rinse cloth as it becomes soiled to thoroughly clean the surface. Stand the painting at an angle—not verticle or flat—in an airy place to dry naturally.

The frame can be cleaned with a half-and-half mixture of alcohol and household ammonia, applied with a very soft brush. Allow to remain on the frame for a few minutes and remove with clear water applied with a brush. Shake off remaining water.

How 'Miss Annie' Smith Garnered A Cool Half Million to Save Kenmore, Old Dominion Shrine

tained the indorsement of the Virginia DAR and later Mrs. James Campbell of Grand Rapids, Mich., a prominent DAR and Colonial Dame, came forward and said, 'Go ahead and get Kenmore. Here's the first dollar toward it'."

Shortly afterwards a group of DAR's from Washington went down to Fredericksburg and recommended that a Kenmore Association be organized, rather than affiliate with the national society. "How right they were in their advice," insists the dauntless Miss Annie. "Kenmore is much stronger for being a separate organization. And, of course, the DAR's helped us."

By traveling countless miles, cooking and serving thousands of fried chicken dinners and persuading hundreds to work for Kenmore, the Smith-Fleming team not only was able to save the historic mansion, but to refurnish it with exquisite furniture.

Second only to Kenmore is Miss Annie's love for the home State. Born in New York City, she came to Fredericksburg on a visit. When she returned, she carried a big flour sack full of dirt which she sprinkled between the mattress and springs of her bed.

"I wanted to make sure my son would be born on Virginia soil," she says.

While trying to collect the first $10,000 for the down payment on Kenmore in the depression days of 1922, Miss Annie and her mother each wrote 5000 letters in addition to some 1900 personal letters written by other association members.

Meantime, Vice President Calvin Coolidge was persuaded to launch a fund drive for Kenmore on July 6, 1922. Miss Annie inveigled Dr. Charles Moore to arrange it with the Vice President and to bring him down to Fredericksburg in his car. "We did not feel we could afford to pay Coolidge's way down on the train," she explains to visitors as she stands near the checkered tablecloths in the Kenmore kitchen." But we sold enough delicious home-cooked food to reimburse Dr. Moore for his expense. This amount was returned with another nice check."

"I can see my 69-year-old mother now, my son Horace, a servant and myself riding on an ice cream truck, at five o'clock in the morning over bad roads to clear $500 at a lawn social," laughs Miss Annie.

When the Sesquicentennial was held in Philadelphia Mrs. Smith went up to make a speech at the behest of the National Society, Sons of the American Revolution. Upon arrival she was dismayed to discover the Old Dominion State had no exhibit in the Palace of Education.

Immediately she tackled the Sesqui officials. To their reply that space cost money, she snapped, "We produced the men in Fredericksburg who made Philadelphia famous. If it hadn't been for us, there would not be a Sesquicentennial."

Needless to say the space was allotted.

Returning to Fredericksburg Miss Annie says, "I scratched around to get an exhibit together, persuading a local man to paint several views of Kenmore under the direction of the famous artist, Gari Melchers."

Then she and her son Horace and her ever-faithful servant hauled the equipment to Philadelphia in a truck.

Miss Annie vs. AFL

Son Horace and the hired man started arranging the exhibit. Soon they came to Miss Annie in great consternation and told her, "Those men over there say we can't work here any more."

Upon inquiring what the trouble was, the men informed her: "Your men can't work here. There's a white man and a colored man working together, and they come early and work late."

"Who are you?' demanded Miss Annie, drawing herself up to her full height of five feet, three inches.

"We're the American Federation of Labor," replied the workmen.

"Well, live up to your name," she admonished. "These men are trying to put before the public something about the early beginnings of America. Not only do I want you to allow these men to work, but I want you to help them, free of charge. And I want your hammers, your saws and your nails."

Thereafter, Miss Annie insists, the place looked like union headquarters with the AFL men contributing their labor gratis. Moreover, whenever grass or something else was needed, it quickly and mysteriously appeared.

Proudly, Miss Annie recalls that the Kenmore exhibit took second prize and cost less than $1000, while the first prize exhibit totaled $40,000.

One of the AFL laborers she tongue-lashed visited Kenmore recently. Scrutinizing the 68-years-young super saleswoman, the man exclaimed: "Heavens! Miss Annie. You should be old and decrepit. And here you are bouncing around like a young filly."

A genius for eliciting cooperation, the indomitable Miss Annie generally depends on masterful persuasion. Then, too, her own boundless enthusiasm and sincerity are so contagious that she infects others with the same virus.

There was the time, for example, she figuratively lit into a chairman of the Rockefeller Foundation committee. Through her husband, the late Horace Smith, a reporter for the old New York World and later one of the Nation's first public relations experts, Miss Annie obtained a five-minute interview with the committee chairman.

"I was scared to death," says Miss Annie, recalling the incident. "The man kept walking backward and forward while I was talking. Finally, I said, "Sit down, please. I feel like I am talking over long distance!"

Then she explained the work of Kenmore and asked if the Rockefeller Foundation would help. He told her that financial assistance might be arranged, provided the foundation would have complete control and asked how the project had been financed so far.

"By love and prayer and working like the devil," was Miss Annie's reply. "And this statement which I am presenting to you is the first typewriting we have paid for; not being at home, I had to have it done in New York. And if you do not send us some money, please give me back my 40 cents." The speech and interview netted the association $5000.

Gingerbread Gold Mine

To raise further funds for Kenmore, the Kenmore Association copyrighted and printed a gingerbread recipe served by Mary Washington, mother of George, to General Lafayette. In 1934 a large company was searching for a prepared gingerbread mix. After experimenting with some 400, they decided Kenmore was best. With Miss Annie handling the deal, the recipe was sold for a nominal sum with the proviso that the company give Kenmore all the gingerbread it could serve, plus half the money realized from gingerbread sales by the DAR and other patriotic organizations. This transaction has netted the association more than $38,000.

Back in the days when more men carried pictures in the back of their watches, the family photographs was Miss Annie's opening conversation wedge. The man might not be interested in the Kenmore project one whit. But if he took out that watch and absently peeked at a picture, he was lost to Miss Annie's cause. When she walked out, she not only knew the family history but carried a large contribution. Nowadays, she simply finds the man's chief interest, which becomes her own while he talks away. That technique, works, too, she has found.

Most Valuable Words

Truth is, Miss Annie considers "as you said," the three most valuable words in the English language for obtaining full cooperation. Once she has planted her idea, she permits the other person to discuss his or her interests. When she returns to her original subject—Kenmore—she injects "as you said," and it works 100 per cent.

With skill and generous praise for her helpers, Miss Annie has welded together a working board of regents and trustees, plus a group of officers for the Kenmore Association, Inc. Mrs. Francis B. Crowninshield of Marblehead, Mass., is president of the Association; Mrs. Edmund Burke Ball of Muncie, Ind., heads a board of regents and vice regents that hail from some 40 States. Since its inception in 1922, Miss Annie has served as national secretary and the guiding spirit of the association.

Colorful and entertaining, with a flair for the dramatic, Miss Annie has produced a ghost story for her beloved Kenmore. Seems that each year she has a fresh encounter with the ghost, and a new tale to tell.

New York Highlights

Perhaps she enhanced her natural narrative talents through association with the famous writers who gathered in her New York apartment on Washington Square from 1907 to 1921. Among those who gathered for her Sunday night fried chicken suppers were the great humorist Will Rogers, Upton Sinclair, Irvin S. Cobb, Edwin C. Hill and her cousin, Dorothy Dix.

It was during the New York stay that Miss Annie won several silver cups for her sailing prowess and that her son Horace became the second model for the Buster Brown cartoons.

Still collecting prizes and honors, Beta Sigma Phi International Sorority named Miss Annie the 1949 Woman of the Year for her civic contributions plus her unparalleled role in making Kenmore one of the Nation's most beautiful shrines.

After witnessing Miss Annie in her typical whirlwind action recently, a GI remarked, "I didn't know anybody like that existed outside of 'Gone With the Wind' pages." He had placed the one-and-only Miss Annie.

'Land Shy' Alexandria By-Passed as Builders Plan 'Fringe' Cities

(For additional stories on Alexandria, see Pages 5 and 7, this section.)

By Conrad P. Harness

AS ALEXANDRIA celebrates its 200th birthday, it is also enjoying one of its biggest building years.

This is an achievement, since the built-up 7½-square-mile city across the Potomac finds itself land shy, with few acres remaining undeveloped

The city which George Washington helped lay out has several builders who erect 5 to 10 homes per year. Larger operators, those who build 50, 100 or 200 houses per year, have by-passed Alexandria in favor of nearby Fairfax County's hundreds of acres awaiting development.

As far as can be determined, there is no builder now operating in Alexandria who completes over 20 homes a year. However, numerous firms are engaged in erecting small numbers of well-designed, soundly constructed new homes.

Rentals Galore Coming

IT'S DIFFERENT with apartments. In the first six months of 1949, permits have been issued for erection of 1248 apartments in 18 buildings, at an estimated construction cost of $7,364,000.

The biggest project is the 750-unit Hunting Towers, three buildings of nine stories each to be erected between the Potomac River and Mount Vernon Memorial hwy. Ground has already been broken.

City Building Inspector A. R. Lash predicts 1949 will be the biggest building year in Alexandria's 200-year history, provided the saw-and-hammer crowd maintains the construction pace of the first six months.

xFirst six months.

Alexandria has seen its population zoom from 33,000 in 1940 to its present 75,000, as estimated by the Chamber of Commerce. Eleven per cent are Negroes.

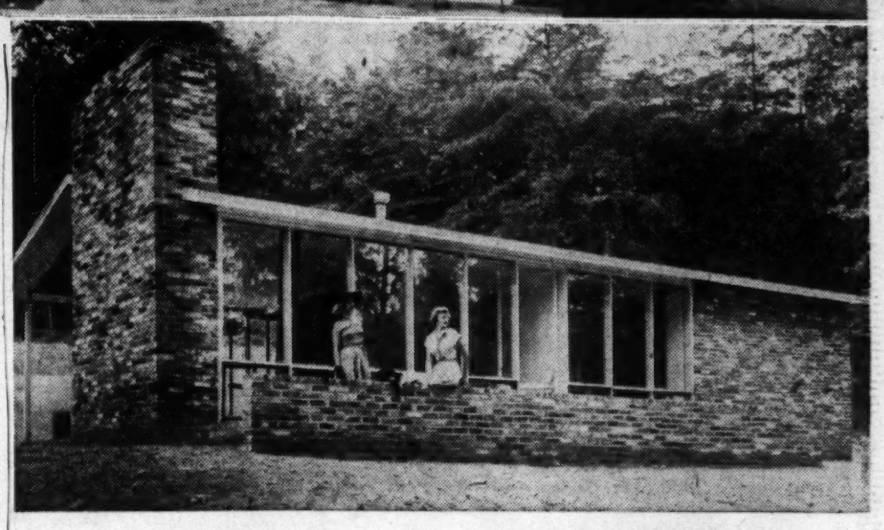
Real estate men like Curtis E. Martin say the phenomenal pouulation rise has occurred because Alexandria offers the most housing for the money and is "away from the hustle and bustle."

Low Cost Homes Needed

THE desperate need today in Alexandria, says Martin, is for homes selling at $8000. He estimates he could sell 300 such homes a year if they were available.

Small home sales predominate in Alexandria, he added, with most older homes selling from $10,000 to $12,000. He said the average mortgage loan processed by his office was between $7000 and $8000, one indication of housing prices.

With cheap land nearly nonexistent within the city limits, Martin said builders attempting to hit the market under $12,000 had to turn out semi-detached or row housing, with detached homes costing, generally speaking, from $12,000 to $25,000.



Photos by Bob Burchette, The Washington Post

The girls enjoy the view from the front of a home under construction in Hollins Hills, off Fort Hunt rd. The basic home will sell for about $11,800 including lot

Another broker, J. T. Moton, said the biggest demand for homes centered in the area west of Mount Vernon ave., with highest calls for new or used homes in Beverly Hills, Braddock Heights and Rosemont.

He termed Beverly Hills, adjacent to the Parkfairfax Apartment development, one of the most desirable home sections in the entire Washington area, favorable competing with the exclusive Chevy Chase area of Northwest

House Stays Fixed; States, Counties Move

Lincolnville, Me. (AP).—A tiny house has stood in two States and three counties—but it has never been moved. The 230-year-old dwelling—one of Maine's oldest—was built about 1718, when Maine was part of Massachusetts. When Maine became a State it was in Lincoln County. In a later county division it was in Hancock County. In 1827, a third division made the area Waldo County.

Insurance Firm Buys $550,000 Building

THE fast-growing Government Employes Insurance Co. has purchased for approximately $550,000 the 6-story building at the southeast corner of 14th and L sts. nw. and will remodel it to house their expanding operations.

The Federal Housing Administration's local insuring office, present tenants, are expected to move Monday to new quarters at 14th and R sts. nw.

Sale of the downtown property, one of the year's biggest transactions, was made by James L. Dixon, real... Leo Goodwin, GEIC president, said a $150,000 remodeling program will start soon, with occupancy expected in the fall. GEIC now occupies the fifth floor of the Investment Building and a structure at 1022 15th st. nw. A. R. "Mike" Clas, architect, is drawing up remodeling plans.

GEIC, which Goodwin said was the largest casualty insurance company in Washington, has experienced a phenomenal growth. Organized in 1936, it had three employes and a one-room office. It now has over 300 employes and has over 105,000 policies.

Former owners of the 14th st. property were listed as Herbert Glassman and Mrs. Sylvia Ostrow. The structure, built in 1927, at one time housed the Buick sales and showrooms of Stanley Horner.

Six story building at 14th and L sts. nw., sold last week

The Library of Congress is now the largest library in the world, occupying two buildings providing 414 miles of bookshelves and covering almost 36 acres of floor space.

Alexandria Draws Home Seekers

Street scene of new semidetached, 2-family homes at Huntington, built by Banks & Lee

Washington and nearby Maryland.

Said to have more pre-Revolutionary structures still standing than any other city, Alexandria attracts some home owners who desire history along with their housing.

Remodeling of old homes between Washington st. and the river is under way on a small scale. Prewar years witnessed remodeling spurts, in the Georgetown manner.

With land scarce inside the city proper, adjoining sections of Fairfax County have enjoyed a construction boom since 1946.

The Washington Post learned yesterday that a 600-acre tract between Belle Haven and Tauxemont, paralleling the Potomac River, has been purchased by a syndicate of Washington area builders.

Known as the Bucknell tract, because it was owned by Bucknell University, it is the largest remaining undeveloped tract near Alexandria. The new owners, Bucknell Development Corp., wish to develop a complete community of detached homes, apartments, shopping facilities, schools and churches.

It is estimated the tract is large enough to accommodate 3500 families. The area is roughly eight miles by Mount Vernon Memorial hwy. to the 14th st. bridge.

Fringe "Cities"

PROJECTS already under way or nearing completion in nearby Fairfax County include: Huntington, a subdivision of $10,000 and under, semidetached, brick and frame homes located off Blunt's rd., between Telegraph rd. and U. S. hwy. No. 1; 554 homes in the 80-acre Jefferson Manor project, two miles south of Alexandria, off U. S. hwy. No. 1, with a few homes under $10,000 still for sale and 176 apartment units to be built shortly.

Other projects on Alexandria's southern fringe include Belle Haven, Tauxemont, Marlin Forest, and Hollin Hills.

Here are facts for readers desiring history along with housing descriptions:

Alexandria, the history books tell us, was named in 1731 after John Alexander, owner of nine square miles of surrounding land. Growing steadily, the village was incorporated as a town on July 13, 1749. Its early history is linked with Colonial Virginia and the beginning of the United States.

Seventeen-year-old George Washington worker as a surveyor's assistant in laying out the new community's 10 streets and 84 half-acre lots.

Long overshadowed by Washington, it predates the Capital by 51 years and in its early days served as an important port.

From 1791 to 1846 Alexandria was a part of the original District of Columbia and was called the County of Alexandria, D. C.

It reverted to Virginia from the District by referendum in 1847. Although held by Union Army troops from 1861 to 1865, it escaped damage.

Casey Jones Hangout

TRAINS of seven railroads filter through the east-coast bottleneck at Alexandria. The vast Potomac Yards is the city's biggest industry with classifying freight, re-icing cars in transit, building and rebuilding refrigerators only a few of its many activities.

The city is rich in historical housing. There's Carlye House, with its secret tunnel to the river which permitted escape from hostile Indians in the eighteenth century; the old Presbyterian Meeting House in whose church yard the Unknown Soldier of the Revolution lies buried; the boyhood home of Robert E. Lee and the house where the Marquis de Lafayette stayed when he visited Alexandria in 1824.

Whether they want housing or history, Alexandria will prove enjoyable to prospective homeowners. As one realtor put it, "Alexandria is a good address. It's a swell place to live."

Institution Plan To Spend 9 Billion

Chicago, July 30 (AP).—A Chicago magazine said today that institutions throughout the Nation, including hotels and restaurants, will spend nine billion dollars in the next 12 months for new construction, remodeling and new equipment.

The magazine Institutions, a trade organ, said its estimate was based on a survey of restaurants, hospitals, hotels, schools, colleges and private and public institutions over the Nation.

Previous surveys conducted by the magazine in 1945 and 1947 indicated a spending program totaling 10 billion dollars and 11 billion dollars respectively during those years.

The publication said it polled more than 40,000 institutions.

Real Estate Briefs From Here and There

A PROPOSAL by the Government to give away a Federal investment of $1,500,000,000 in war housing projects over the Nation has been hit by the National Association of Real Estate Boards. Calvin K. Snyder, of NAREB, Thursday told the Senate Banking and Currency Committee:

"I have followed the heated discussions over fund slashes of more than a billion dollars for foreign aid. Here economy is considered a vital factor. Yet I have heard hardly a murmur of protest over the provision of omnibus bill, S.-2246 which would give away the Federal Government's one-and-a-half-billion-dollar investment in Lanham Act and veterans' reuse housing. This paradox is most difficult to understand."

The proposal to give the war-built housing to local housing authorities involves 467,000 units of all types. Snyder recommended that the Government transfer the properties to municipalities, not public housing agencies, at half price, to be paid in five annual installments out of income, with the provision that thereafter the housing could not be operated as public subsidized housing.

Or, said Snyder, let the Government sell the homes to veterans at prices not to exceed one half the Government's capital investment. There are scattered Lanham Act housing in nearby Virginia and Maryland which would be affected by the order.

A new department to handle realty and insurance requirements of embassies and members of Congress has been established by Claggett & Shaw, newly formed Bethesda, Md., firm. Richard F. Clagett has 35 years of realty and construction experience in the nearby Maryland area. John F. Shaw, co-publisher with his wife, Carolyn Hagner Shaw, of the "Social List of Washington," is an insurance and realty specialist. The firm is now located at 7824 Wisconsin ave., but plans to erect their own office building near the Bank of Bethesda.

The Producers' Council has urged that the Government's new housing research program, authorized in the recent general housing bill, be closely coordinated with the work of the Building Research Advisory Board, recently formed under auspices of the National Academy of Sciences.

Such cooperation would produce greater results and increased economies for the home buying public, the council declared. "Building research already is under way at a combined cost of more than 15 million dollars a year, and the possibility of unnecessary duplication of effort and expense can be avoided if Government and industry can work together in the field."

The housing expediter said during May and June a total of 50,752 landlord's petitions were granted increasing rents on 98,608 rental units. Rents, said OHE, were increased an average of $6.50 per month per unit, an average increase of about 19 per cent.

Sixty per cent of the increases were granted on grounds of expenditures by landlords for major capital improvements and increased service. The remaining 40 per cent were granted under hardship and inequity provisions of the rent regulation.

Novelist Is No Realty Salesman

Denver (AP).—Novelist William MacLeod Raine does all right turning out Western yarns but he admits he's no Titan as a real estate salesman.

In 1887 Raine's father bought 10 lots in the Cherry Hills section for $400. Since then father and son have paid out $100 in taxes. The other day the author sold them for the same price his father paid. He said no way could be devised within reason to bring water to the land.

Lustron Produces 42 Prefabs in One Day

Columbus, Ohio, July 30.—Shipment yesterday of 42 all-steel Lustron houses, the largest one-day shipment ever made by Lustron, capped a record week and month for the prefab manufacturing firm, it was announced yesterday.

The 42 units, en route to dealers in 14 States, sent the week's total shipments of the porcelain enameled steel homes over the 100 mark. Sales for July were said to be 50 per cent higher than for June.

Meanwhile, in Washington the House Banking and Currency Committee will hold hearings on Wednesday and Thursday while Reconstruction Finance Corp. and Lustron officials review progress made by Lustron. The firm has received more than $30,000,000 in RFC loans.

Alexandria Moves Fast as Bond Issue Aids in New Improvements

By Richard L. Lyons

ALEXANDRIA residents will get a greater return of municipal service on their tax dollar this year than last. And next year they should get even more.

Municipal agencies which watched with their hands tied, while the city doubled in size to about 75,000 during the war years, are now moving full steam in all directions to catch up.

The most tangible activity is the spending of $5,250,000 received for bonds issued last summer for capital improvements. The issue did not cause a tax increase this year. And R. Samuel Luckett, chairman of the city council's finance committee, predicts no tax rate jump next year.

Finer Things in Life

THIS is what the bond funds have been or will be spent for:

(1) $2,837,000 in new schools. (Schools are treated in a separate article in this section.)

(2) $1,158,000 for street repair. The money will be spent largely on rebuilding heavily traveled thoroughfares. Much of the work has been accomplished.

(3) $250,000 for a municipal auditorium and gymnasium, for which a site has been selected.

(4) Two hundred twenty thousand dollars for acquiring and improving public grounds. Part of this has been spent to buy land that may become the city's first real park.

(5) The rest of the bond funds are being used to extend the storm and sanitary sewer system, buy new fire equipment and improve the city's 14 playgrounds.

Low Crime Rate

NEWCOMERS will be interested in these facts about Alexandria:

Its fire department has consistently led Virginia cities of similar size in recent years in low fire losses. Fire insurance rates are lower in Alexandria than in any other Virginia community near Washington.

Its major crime rate is very low, and only one person has been killed in traffic accidents there this year. In 1947, the city received a State pedestrian safety award for cities of its size.

Its health center is the most modern in the State. Thirty-five thousand have actively taken part in the city-wide recreation program set up six years ago.

This does not mean that Alexdria is a municipal Utopia. Wretched slum areas spot the old part of town. Parking facilities around the King st. business area are totally inadequate.

But there are definite signs, besides the bond issue that the city is aware of its new size and responsibilities.

The health department, stimulated by a new health officer, has launched a drive to clean up the city—rats, slum, rubbish, eating establishments. This moved the city council recently to set a committee to look into slum clearance and low cost housing.

Realty Reassessment

A FIRE prevention bureau has has been set up, and a new fire code gives it authority to enforce safety regulations. Last week the city council created the office of central purchasing agent—who will presumably save the city money by buying equipment for all departments.

A complete reassessment of real estate is now being made to make sure homeowners pay their fair share of taxes, but no more.

Real estate is theoretically assessed at 50 per cent of fair market value and is taxed at the rate of $2.75 per $100 assessed value. Tax on personal property is $3 per full $100 value.

Perhaps the most important projects now underway in the city are (1) the work of the charter commission, which has been asked to bring the charter, and therefore the form of government, up to date; and (2) the search for a new city manager, who would be a key figure in putting the charter changes into effect.

Mayor William T. Wilkins thinks the fact that Alexandria is a good place to live "is evidenced by the fact that so many thousands come here and don't leave."

Robert S. Marshall, jr., who took the job of city manager last winter on a temporary basis, put the same thought in more practical terms. "It's primarily a residential town with excellent suburbs. And where else can you live outside Washington and be only 10 minutes from the White House?

Let's Get Down to Earth

Time to Plant Peonies For Spring Blooming

By James H. Beattie

THE peony is one of the best perennial flowering plants. It is easily grown and possesses surpassing beauty. Fine returns are obtained each year with minimum attention. The peony is very well adapted to the climatic, soil and other conditions in the Washington area, and the culture of the plant should be greatly extended.

Peony growers recommend late summer and autumn planting of peonies, hence, this is an opportune time to prepare for the planting of a few clumps in the yard or the garden.

Actually, any time from the middle of August until early fall is suitable.

The mother plants from which the divisions are taken to establish the new planting have completed most of their growth for the season and the division may be removed without seriously affecting the blooming next spring.

Peony planting stock offered by commercial peony growers usually consists of four or five "eyes," or buds, with a portion of the roots of the mother plant. Divisions of this size are usually preferable to larger ones. Divisions should always consist of young, vigorous material.

Slow to Bloom

PEONIES require some time to become well established in their new location. The best results seldom come until about the third season. Careful preparation of the site, and good cultivation will hasten materially the time when the plants reach their prime. There's often a temptation to obtain peony planting stock from some nearby yard. This is good, provided the material is healthy.

Root-knot is very prevalent in peony plants that have been in one location for a long time. The trouble is liable to be particularly acute on sandy soils. The use of infected planting stock can lead only to disappointment.

Peonies will thrive on almost any fertile, well-drained soil, but if it is possible to make a choice, most growers select a clay loam. Particular attention must be paid to the matter of obtaining good drainage. The plants dislike soggy soil.

Peony plants usually remain in the same location for a number of years and particular attention should be given to selecting a site where there is plenty of sunshine and no interference by the roots of trees, hedges and shrubbery.

A sunny, unshaded corner of the lawn is a fine place for a few clumps of peonies, but they must receive sufficient cultivation and care to insure growth without competition from grass, weeds and other unfavorable factors.

Take Pains With Soil

THROUGH preparation of the planting site will pay dividends for many years. Complete subsoil drainage is required. If drainage is lacking install a line of drainage tile under each row. A trench partly filled with broken stones, gravel or some other porous material, with an outlet for the drainage water, may be less costly.

Digging individual holes for each plant in impervious soil, and refilling without providing an outlet for the drainage water in the bottom of the hole, is very objectionable. Such a condition means the setting of the plant in a practically water-tight container.

Fine, long-time results usually follow the deep preparation of the site by removing top-soil and sub-soil to a depth of a foot or more, correcting the sub-soil drainage when necessary, and refilling the plant site with a mixture of top-soil and compost.

For each plant site mix in 3 or 4 ounces of 5-10-5 fertilizer, the same quantity of superphosphate and a half pound of ground limestone. If the plants are to be set singly, the prepared site should be 2, to 2½ feet in diameter.

When the plants are set in garden rows, the entire row should be prepared as a unit, and the plants set about 3 feet apart in each row. In the long run, it is economy to have the rows 4 to 5 feet apart. While the plants are young, beans, beets or any other low-growing row crop may be grown in these wide spaces between the peony rows.

Moore's Garden Saves $2 Day on Food; Summer Foods Enjoyed Into Winter

By Dell Warren

HOW TO beat the high cost of food has been discovered by Mr. and Mrs. Basil E. Moore, 106 Cherry Grove ave., Annapolis, Md. Their secret is a 2/3-acre garden.

They estimate it saves them at least $2 a day the year round. Moreover, they have a greater quantity, variety and a better quality of fruits and vegetables than the average family.

Moore has a full-time job as assistant officer to the commandant of the Naval Academy, and he gardens as a hobby in the evenings and on Saturdays. He says gardening is no more exhausting than a lot of things his friends do for relaxation, and it is a much more rewarding hobby.

In his back-yard garden, Moore grows 13 kinds of fruit, and 39 varieties of vegetables. He has nine varieties of apples, five varieties of peaches, two plum, a cherry and a pear tree. He grows grapes, raspberries, blackberries, blueberries, figs, currants, and boasts 100 strawberry plants.

Strawberries in December

BUT WHAT Mrs. Moore does with the crops her husband raises is the miracle. They enjoy the results of their garden the entire year. All the fruit and vegetables the family can eat goes on the table shortly after it is picked at its prime. Any excess goes into the deep freezer or the pressure canner, or is jelled, juiced, pickled or preserved.

Strawberries in December are commonplace on the Moore menu. So are red raspberries, green lima beans, asparagus tips or fresh rhubarb pie. If the family likes a dish in June, they eat it also in January.

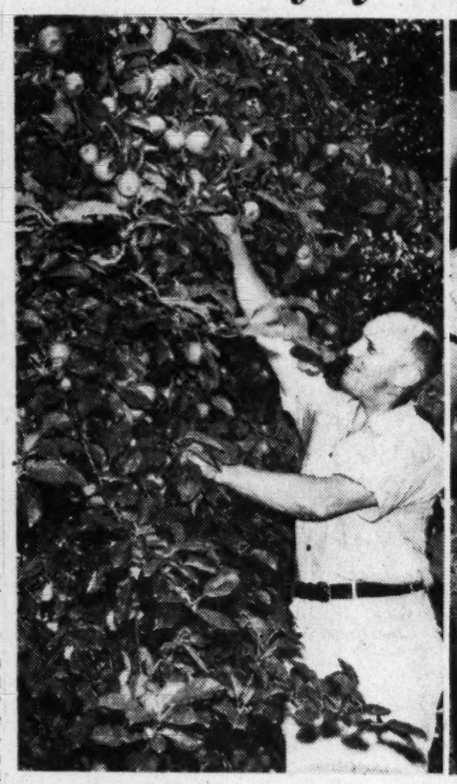
In 1930 they bought a city lot, 100x215, on which they built their house and garage, surrounded by spacious lawns. Several years ago they purchased the lot adjoining theirs at the rear, which has a depth of 230 feet. Not all has yet been cleared for cultivation.

The deep freeze has solved the problem of fresh vegetables throughout the year. Before they bought the 8-cubic-foot freezer a year ago, Mrs. Moore had pressure canned large quantities, but they still bought fresh vegetables in the winter. Last winter they had to buy only head lettuce, a few heads of green cabbage and celery.

24 Cubic Feet of Food

DIRECTLY from the garden came parsnips, salsify and carrots, which were dug as needed. It was a mild winter and endive and brussel sprouts, which had been protected by corn stalks, lasted outside until the middle of January.

Stored in the unheated attic were three bushels of sweet potatoes, a bushel and a half of onions, Hubbard and butternut squash, pumpkins and apples. Apples were also stored in a pit dug in the garden. When the apples began to deteriorate in February, Mrs. Moore canned them for apple sauce.



Moore thins apples on his 18-year-olds tree. One year he sold enough apples from this tree to pay his lot taxes

Mrs. Moore keeps her freezer packed with home-grown, fresh vegetables and fruit and ready-to-bake pastry

Mrs. Moore cannot tell exactly how much food she freezes because there is such a constant overturn in the contents of the freezer. She estimates she completely fills the 8-foot box three times a year.

Moore has 90 hills of asparagus, so quantities of it are frozen in season, and there is plenty of freezer room.

Later, when lima beans are ready, some of the asparagus has been used.

The freezer also is used to prevent waste in the garden because of weather conditions. This summer when the drought was cutting short the crop of zucchini and yellow straightneck squash, Moore picked all of them, and Mrs. Moore froze them all at one time.

In the winter, when she gets a Hubbard squash from the attic, she cooks the entire squash, serves what she wants for one meal and puts the rest in the freezer for future use.

Pie at Moment's Notice

THE family likes apple pies made from Yellow Transparents, but since this variety of apple does not last long, Mrs. Moore makes up a big batch of fresh apple pies, then puts them uncooked in the freezer, ready to bake later in the summer.

But the deep freezer has not entirely superseded her pressure canner or water-pack methods of preserving food. During the war, Mrs. Moore was an instructor in canning centers at West Annapolis and Glen Burnie, and she still does a lot of canning because she likes some things better that way.

Last year she put up 28 quarts of a special favorite soup mix. She canned 36 quarts of pears, and about 15 quarts of peaches. By cold pack, she canned 45 quarts of tomatoes and additional juice, and 35 pints of grape juice. Her family likes canned string beans better than frozen, so she cans them. She only freezes lima beans.

This year she froze 12 packages of cherries and canned 18 quarts. Last year she canned corn as well as froze it, because she was not sure they'd like frozen corn, but they did, so this year she is only freezing it.

"But isn't such gardening, canning and freezing an endless amount of work?" friends are always asking.

Mrs. Moore insists she does not spend any more time freezing and canning than her neighbors do going to market to shop for fresh vegetables and fruits. She puts up small quantities at a time, and while she does some work nearly every morning, when she gets ready to prepare a meal, she saves time because much of her preparation is already done.

MOORE does all of his own work, except the annual plowing, with a little help from his son, Bazil, jr., a veteran, who attends law school in Baltimore. He uses only hand tools. To keep up the fertility of the soil, he practices approved conservation methods, sowing rye and vetch in the fall to plow under in the spring. Much of his land produces two or more crops of vegetables a year. He sprays his fruit according to the university extension programs.

In estimating how much they save, the Moores point out they are always eating early fruits and vegetables at the luxury prices, strawberries at 60 cents a quart and asparagus tips at 65 cents a pound. Their produce is always ready before it's on the market.

They believe any family could duplicate their success with equal family teamwork. The trick to gardening they say, is not the amount of work you do, but doing it at the right time. A garden won't wait for a more convenient time, nor will canning and freezing. Being on the job regularly is what produces the dividends.

Border of Perennials Puts Pride in Garden

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

A WELL PLANNED perennial border is one of the most satisfactory parts of any garden. The English have long recognized the worth of perennials and an "herbaceous border" is the pride of most English gardens.

These borders are not achieved in a month or a year. To have a satisfactory one means much experimenting and many disappointments, but they are well worth trying. The owner can sit back and watch old friends come into bloom year after year and know that with a little care they will give pleasure for years to come.

Experiments will prove there are certain plants that like your garden. Others will stubbornly refuse to settle down and give a good performance.

The best advice is that, when one finds a plant likes the garden and gives its best performance, specialize on it and get other varieties of that particular plant and those which have a different time of blooming.

Plan Autumn Planting

AUTUMN is a good time to dig and plan for a perennial border. It is then that the bulbs are placed that are such an important part of the garden. It is also the time for dividing and resetting many hardy things, and a time when neighbors are apt to be generous with surplus plants.

To be at its best, a perennial bed should border the garden. Here it can have its graduated growth from the tiny edging plants back to the tall things such as phlox, delphinium, tall lilies, fall aster and perhaps a background of a climbing rose or clematis.

The bed should be at least five feet wide to get the best effect. It should be well dug and fertilized to begin with and if the soil is heavy, coal cinders or sand should be dug in to aid the drainage.

Bone meal, a slow acting fertilizer, is always good for a perennial border and we always make it a practice when transplanting to place a small amount of bone meal in the bottom of the hole.

If you want border requiring a minimum of work, have the plants close enough together so that when they are in full foliage the ground will be almost entirely covered. This will eliminate weed growth and keep the ground from baking out in mid-summer

Don't Forget Food

When planting like this, the bed should be given a good going-over in early spring—the plants cultivated and a small amount of commercial fertilizer dug in. 5-10-5 is good or any of the commercial fertilizers for general garden use.

In cultivating, care must be taken not to cultivate where late arrivals are planted. Many plants such as the perennial ageratum, do not appear until other perennials are inches tall and some of the earliest are in bloom.

Until one becomes familiar with the habits of their perennials wooden plant labels are useful reminders of their location.

In ordering new and untried perennials one should order at least three, or better still, nine or a dozen and place them in three parts of the border. It will frequently be found that a plant will do well in one end of a bed and will be weak or disappear not many feet away, due to a slight difference in sun or drainage.

A careful study should be made in the selection of perennials, for if successful it will mean they will be companions for years, and their divisions will help fill the beds with a supply of healthy plants. The selection should be considered for many things, growing tendencies, whether they are spreaders" and space takers or whether they will require watching to keep them from being overpowered by their more aggressive neighbors in the border.

Use Foliage for Contrast

COLOR, of course, is of prime importance and foliage should be more carefully considered than is generally the case in most American gardens. This is a point that the English take into full consideration in their herbaceous gardens.

All English gardening articles discuss the foliage effects as well as the beauty of bloom. There can be the contrast of the fine broad leaves of the funkia with the fountain-like green of the foliage of daylilies with the more delicate leaves of some of our more bushy perennials.

Once one has indulged in growing perennials and has begun to achieve a really satisfactory bed with its long season of bloom with a minimum of work, plants become like old friends whose coming we watch for with pleasure each year. One learns their different traits. Some stay where they are planted, others will try and wander or crowd out less aggressive neighbors.

Garden Club Notes

The Men's Garden Club of Montgomery County will meet Thursday at 8 p. m. at the Battery Park Club House, Glenbrook rd., Bethesda. Dr. Fred V. Grau, of the Department of Agriculture, will speak on "Preparation and Care of Lawns." All men interested in gardening are invited.

The public is invited to attend two outdoor demonstrations on the proper method of budding roses, sponsored by the Potomac Rose Society. Experts will explain the art of budding roses, including the selection of bud wood, the bud, and the proper manner of removing the bud and applying the same to the base stock

Demonstrations will be given today at 2:30 p. m. at R. E. Scammell's garden, 2810 Bladensburg rd. ne. The second will be on August 7, at 2:30, at the Arlington Memorial Gardens located on Edison rd., south of Lee Highway, Virginia.

Frequent rains have made it difficult to control the Mexican bean beetle. Dusts and sprays have been washed off almost as soon as applied, necessitating frequent applications. Rotenone dust is easily applied and safe. Before the pods form, cryolite may be used. Old bean plantings should not be allowed to remain after the harvest has passed. These neglected plants serve as a source of infestation for later bean plantings in the garden.

Sweet corn responds in a marked degree to the application of nitrate of soda or some other nitrogen salt during the early period of ear formation. A tablespoonful of the nitrogen salt scattered thinly around the base of each sweet corn hill will usually increase the yield. Similar applications made at two to three week intervals throughout the whole growth period of the crop will yield even greater returns.

There's two excellent reasons for harvesting early planted white potatoes as soon as the vines have ceased growing. There is real danger that the potatoes will rot the soil. It is wise to harvest them before weed growth makes it difficult. After harvesting and sorting, the potatoes should be stored in a cool, dark, well-ventilated place. Cold storage at about 40 degrees F is best.

Cows Are Canny Creatures, Can Statistics Show

The number of cows in the United States has declined at the rate of more than a million head a year since 1945, but the supply of milk is more plentiful than ever.

The bovine population now figures out to one milch cow for every six persons. In 1920, there was one for every five people and back in Grandpa's time in 1870 one for every four.

These figures were compiled from various sources by the American Can Co. and were issued with the conforting note that nobody need shed a tear into the milk over the seeming disappearance of Old Bossy from the landscape.

The reason is that the 24,450,000 cows and heifers under 2 years old now chewing their cuds on the Nation's farms are giving practically as much milk as did 27,770,000 in 1945.

Alexandria Expands School Facilities

ALEXANDRIA school officials can face opening day this fall with more peace of mind than they have had since before the war.

Thanks to a $2,837,000 building program, most schools have seen an end to the difficulties of a classroom shortage—double shifts for primary graders and shifting of students to strange schools.

These problems are expected to be eliminated from all schools when the building program is completed, probably during this next school year.

Alexandria's school plant did not fall so far behind its population growth as did some other communities — notably Fairfax County, which a year ago said it needed $7,500,000 for immediate school construction.

One reason, undoubtedly, was that as a city Alexandria could issue bonds by the vote of its city council without going to the people in a referendum. Another reason was that Alexandria is geographically very small—only seven square miles—and could in most cases meet its problems by adding to existing buildings rather than construct new schools at greater cost.

Yet, enrollments have increased much faster than the school plant. And a survey made last year indicates first grade enrollments will rise steeply for the next four years.

New Senior High

TO MEET existing needs and prepare for the future, the school board last year presented the city council two proposed "groups" of school construction.

Group I included immediate needs and is now well under construction, with $2,837,000 allocated to schools in last year's bond issue. Group II includes two new elementary schools and another white high school, which the board feels will be needed by 1952. Funds have not been appropriated for Group II, and no money appears to be in sight for this construction in the immediate future.

Before the building program started, the city had 12 schools, nine white and three Negro, for its 7262 students. The Group I program will give it three new schools and additions to four others.

The Group I buildings that will be ready for use this fall are:

1. Ficklin elementary school in northeast Alexandria, containing 12 classrooms, cafeteria and other auxiliary rooms.

2. Seven-classroom addition to the Maury elementary school on Russell rd. in the Rosemont section.

3. Six-classroom addition to the MacArthur elementary school on Janney's la.

Rating Is Relative

THIS WILL end double shifts at Maury, MacArthur and at all schools east of the railroad tracks, school officials said.

Other Group I schools that are expected to be completed sometime during the year are:

1. Twelve - classroom elementary school at Parkfairfax.

2. Six-classroom addition to George Mason elementary school in Beverly Hills.

3. Twelve-classroom Negro high school in the old part of town.

4. Six-classroom addition to Mount Vernon elementary school in Del Ray.

The rating of Alexandria public schools is probably a relative thing.

The newcomer from the North may find Alexandria's teachers' salaries are lower than where he came from. But the city has consistently been at, or near, the top of the list of Virginia cities on teachers' pay.

With a pay raise granted last winter, Alexandria teachers now start at $2400 and are increased $100 a pear to $3700. Those with higher degrees get more. A bachelor's degree is required of all new teachers.

New Churches Started

ALEXANDRIA students still pay rent on their textbooks. But Nation-wide achievement tests place the city's students above the national average.

In addition to its public school system, the city has a number of parochial schools—Catholic, Episcopal and Lutheran—a few private schools and a host of private kindergartens.

Fifteen religious denominations are represented in the city. At least three new churches are now under construction. And the historic Old Presbyterian Meeting House opened with a new congregation last month after being closed for about 70 years.—R. L. L.

Home Hints

THIS MAY be a man's world, but Dad sees little at home to prove it. The modern father, in his compact and streamlined home, seldom has a strictly male sanctuary like "papa's den" of the gaslight era. But some family heads, seeking a room to call their own, are creating home workshops, hobby rooms and "offices" as substitutes for the old-fashioned den.

In the modern space-saving dwelling, the basement is the most likely place for Dad's room. It offers space, quiet and distance from most other home activities. A little ingenuity, some partitioning and reasonable expense can convert nonproductive cellar space into "a world of his own" for the man of the house.

The den must be drier, brighter and more pleasant than the rest of the basement. Wood partitions, a few electricity outlets and bright, moisture-proof floor and wall coverings such as tile will make it so.

Dad's retreat can be adapted to almost any of his interests or hobbies. Built-in bookcases, an easy chair and a few reading lamps make it a comfortable library-reading room. Wall work benches, a small lathe and carpenter tools make it a workshop. Tile is an ideal floor covering for workshop floors subjected to heavy use and dousings with grease, oil or acids.

Away from blaring radios, children's banter, and other evening household noises, Dad will find his monthly bookkeeping an easier job in his "home office." A file cabinet, small desk and fireproof safety box for valuables in a cellar partition give Pop an office at home.

Dad's hideaway can also serve as a music room when he's not using it. Far from sleeping quarters, it's a good spot for Junior's late evening record or radio jam sessions.

Mark Garbage Can To Reduce Thefts

To discourage thefts and misplacements of ash and garbage cans and their covers, many home owners find that it pays to paint their names and addresses on the sides of cans and on the tops of covers.

Recommended by all authorities as being safe from rats, fires and fire, galvanized steel ash and garbage cans are easily painted.

Galvanized steel cans which have been exposed to the weather for a few weeks need only a dusting before paint is applied. New ones should be wiped with a rag which has been dipped in a vinegar and water solution. This treatment insures good adhesion between the paint and the galvanized steel surfaces.

Construction Awards Total $131,819,000

New York, July 30 (AP).—Construction awards totaled $131,819,000 for the five-day week ended July 28, a drop of 17 per cent from the previous week, the Engineering News-Record has reported.

The cumulative total of $4,579,411,000 for the first 30 weeks of the year, however, was a similar figure above the total for a year ago.

The week's contracts were 21 per cent below the previous four-week moving average but 15 per cent above the corresponding five-day week a year ago.

The United States was the biggest buyer of the 108,395,000 pounds of tobacco which Turkey exported in 1948.

17 From Britain Inspect Building Methods

SEVENTEEN members of Britain's building industry are in town to determine how the American building industry can pay such high wages and still sell homes at prices the average building worker can afford.

The average English building trades worker earns 50c per hour, according to Robert O. Lloyd, who erected 800 homes last year in Great Britain.

The tour, sponsored by ECA, will cover Detroit, Chicago, Boston and New York. A study of American construction is expected to reveal methods which can be used in England to increase productivity. About 210,000 homes will be built there this year, Lloyd estimated, most of them for local public housing authorities.

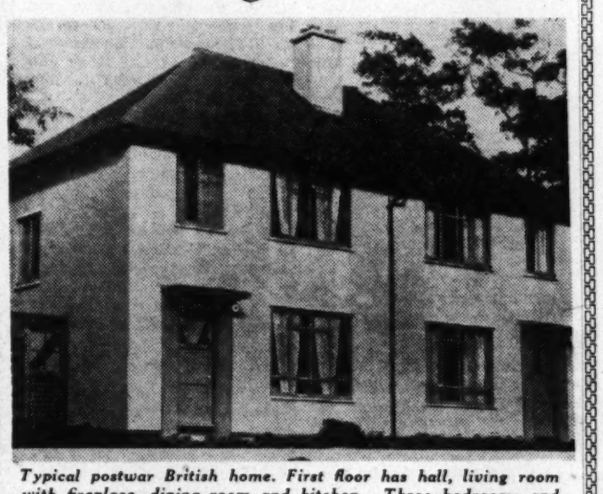
Under England's present housing setup, Lloyd explained, new homes are allocated according to family need, family size, war service, etc. About 20 per cent of new homes are sold to private individuals under government-controlled permit system. All other homes are rented by housing authorities.

Those lucky enough to purchase new homes generally pay 10 per cent down on the $5400 to $6200 sales price. For this the buyer acquires a two-story, three-bedroom, one-bath no-basement house of poured concrete foundations and walls. Heating is by a fireplace in the living room and an electric stove in the upstairs master bedroom. Most homes now under construction are semidetached or in rows.

The building team has visited a few local building sites. Tomorrow they will visit the new Fairmont Heights, Md., school, and the Kenmore Apartments under construction by Jeffress-Dyer Construction Co. on Connecticut ave. On Tuesday they will inspect a Fort Belvoir theater.

The team will be guests tomorrow at a luncheon by the Washington Building Congress at Hotel Mayflower. British guests will be seated at tables with local members of the construction industry so they may exchange information and ideas.

The ECA has been aided in arranging meetings with American builders and architects by the Associated General Contractors and the American Institute of Architects.



Typical postwar British home. First floor has hall, living room with fireplace, dining room and kitchen. Three bedrooms and bath are upstairs. Nearly all homes now under way in Great Britain are semidetached or row housing. Most sell for around $5400 to $6200. Construction is entirely government controlled

APT WERE THE OLD CARTOGRAPHERS in titling the Bermudas "The Summer Isles," for that gracious season never entirely departs from the group. In waters crystal clear and along miles of golden sands, tinted pink and white by coral dust, swimmers and sunbathers find a paradise. This lazily romantic couple watch enthralled as the sun sinks and dusk-shades creep over the warm strand. Tomorrow it'll be just as beautiful. Access to the beaches, the majority of which are on the protected south shore of the main island, usually is by bicycle. Salty southern breezes at this time of year assure against undue heat.

You Can Make the 'Grand Tour' Without Floating an ECA Loan

By Mary Rutter

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 30 (AP).—Thinking about a trip abroad and wondering if you can afford it?

You can do the "grand tour" now at a cost of about $29 a day if you are careful.

I recently returned from a 44-day trip through England, Scotland, France, Switzerland and Italy. It cost me $1314.18.

In return, I got a swell suntan, some priceless photos, a liberal education and enough memories to last me well through the rocking chair era.

I had just 29 cents in my purse after I paid off the taxi at home. The rest of my bank account had been disbursed as follows: $338—round trip tourist-class boat fare; $703.96—hotels, meals, trains, sightseeing trips, entertainments; $102.72—tips; $134—gifts and souvenirs; $17.50—traveler's and baggage insurance.

Varied Itinerary

I HAD a week in London, three days in Edinburgh, nine in Paris, two on the Riviera, three in Rome, and side trips to such places as the French chateaus of Versailles and Fontainebleau, the Trossachs of Scotland, Shakespeare's home at Stratford-on-Avon, and the lovely English lake country.

The first question I was asked on my return was: "How is the food over there?"

I certainly didn't starve. I gained about eight pounds. But even in the midst of the plentiful and fanciful French cookery, my thoughts turned toward ice cream sodas and the lowly hot dog. In England, these thoughts became a positive craving. The English diet is monotonous.

Be sure to stick some chocolate in your suitcase if you like sweets. It is scarce in England and expensive on the Continent. Smokers should take their own tobacco.

In figuring expenses, remember that two cannot travel as cheaply as one and that the later in the crowded summer season one goes the more it will cost. A tour budget should also include clothes bought for the trip.

Those Elusive Baths

THE French national tourist office's latest estimate of hotel rates ranges from $2 to $10 for single with bath. Mine in Paris cost from $2.50 to $3.50. Like a lot of tourists in France, I usually found that the elusive "room with bath" had already been taken, and that my bath was "down the hall." My hotel room in London was $3.10 per day and it was nice.

Entertainment costs in Europe are a happy surprise. I saw the Old Vic Repertory Company, London's finest, with Sir Laurence Olivier and Vivian Leigh, for about $3.20 in one of the best seats in the house. Other London theaters cost even less.

A fifth-row seat at the Comedie Francaise in Paris to see "Cyrano de Bergerac" was $2.70. I made a conducted tour of the Paris cabarets, with champagne and everything, for $8. An all-day bus tour around London cost $4.50.

Tipping is the big worry for Americans, and a lot of us, unfamiliar with the money, overdo it.

"Please remember we have got to live here after you leave," one American in Paris told me. "Don't make it tough for us by tipping twice the usual rate. They already think that all Americans who come abroad must be rich."

If you are a working girl with a yen to visit faraway places, don't be afraid to strike out on your own. It's the best way to get to know the people in the countries you visit. Discard that old notion that English people won't talk to you on trains or in other public places. In fact, one Englishwoman I met who had been to the United States made the same complaint of Americans!

1950 Reservations Scarce

IT MAY seem early to talk about sailing for Europe in 1950, but travel agents say that in another few weeks not many ship accommodations will be available, especially in tourist or third class.

So if you didn't get to go this year, you are just in time to plan for next.

Write now to the official government travel information services of the countries you intend to visit. They'll send you bushels of folders and maps telling about hotels, trains, customs regulations, money exchange and what to do if you want to take a car or airplane abroad.

Then there's the passport and visas to get, the immunizations to take, and the packing to plan.

Women, put that third suitcase back in the attic, along with the fancy hatbox! You'll be a happier, more carefree traveler without them. For my six-week journey I took one Pullman-size suitcase and an overnight bag. Nylon's quick-drying, nonwrinkling qualities make the lingerie problem simple. Male tourists are wearing nylon shirts and washing them out at night.

Don't be fooled by the temperature in your home town when you are packing for a summer in England. Take wool suits and warm pajamas or gowns. There will probably be no central heating in your hotel, and those tiny electric jobs wouldn't warm a small doghouse comfortably.

Leave enough room in your suitcase for those souvenirs and gifts you'll be buying. Europe is a treasure trove for collectors.

I bought a cashmere sweater and scarves in Scotland, china in England, perfume in France and a hand-embroidered blouse and hand-tooled leather wallet in Italy.

But my best souvenir is not in my suitcase. It is the memory I have of an elderly Czechoslovakian woman who stood beside me on deck as our ship entered New York harbor. She spoke no English, but we needed no common language as I watched the tears roll down her seamed, tired face. She too was coming home.

AFRA Workshop To Air Playlets

By Sonia Stein

STEP UP and have a $300 sample of airborne ham. Washington's radio actors union is preparing 16 weekly half-hour samples of its talent on tap which would, if paid for at union rates, cost close to $300 a show.

The sample shows, the first of which will be heard this Thursday at 10:30 p. m. on WTOP, are being produced to remind the local advertising agencies and sponsors—in rather blunt fashion that Washington is teeming with acting talent.

The virtues of a dramatic show in a town which seems to be infested with disc jockeys, will be "indicated" to the sponsors.

The entertainment dividend Washingtonians will get out of this demonstration series should be high since all the acting and directing talent will be professional as well as the scripts, mostly authored by local people. However, if anybody has a suitable half-hour script he thinks would compete, and is willing to let Washington's branch of the American Federation of Radio Actors use it for the series, he's welcome to submit it. There's no financial compensation since it's a nonprofit deal all the way round, and station time is donated.

Larry Beckerman, WTOP producer and director, is chairman of the local AFRA Workshop. He will produce the first four in the 16-week series at WTOP in the Thursday night spot.

Then WOL Takes Over

THE SECOND set of four will be produced at WOL by that station's Larry Frommer on Wednesday nights at 10. Ken French will produce the shows at WRC, Jack Logan at WMAL later.

The first script is "Noah" by Marvin Beer, a Government radio specialist. It's about a modern patriarch who tries to escape the atomic bomb threat by fleeing to a mountain. The second in the series will be a comedy called "Haystraw Theater" written by Beckerman himself.

None of the plays has yet been cast but don't be surprised to find the "Factfinder," or announcers Jackson Weaver, Holly Wright, Harold Stepler or Johnny Batchelder "in character." The shortage of locally produced dramatic shows has driven these actors into making a living the honest way. But they're consumed with the urge to act and when AFRA polled its members about conducting such a workshop, the vote was 68 to 1 in favor of working free for fun.

WHILE WASHINGTON'S professional actors rally 'round to work for the love of it, 10 of Nancy Osgood's friends—most of them rank amateurs—are rallying 'round purely for the love of Nancy. WRC's woman commentator is vacationing these next two weeks and has invited some members of Washington's official and journalistic society to fill the 9:30 a. m. period with whatever whim dictates.

Mrs. Charles Brannan, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, is scheduled to lead the field tomorrow. The idea of a husband-and-wife team naturally popped up but the Secretary demurred. "It is gracious enough of Nancy to have one Brannan on; it would be taking advantage of her to have two." Mrs. Georgia Neese Clark will be guest of the guest commentator.

"Information, Please"

ESTHER VAN WAGONER TUFTY who runs her own news bureau here will interview the Finnish Minister on Tuesday. Since she's going to go to Finland soon on a newshunt, she'll ply him with questions she really wants to know the answer to—something of a revelation in broadcasting.

Emil Hurja and Representative John Bennett of Michigan who comes from America's most Finnish district, have also been invited to appear.

Mrs. Claude Pepper, wife of the Senator from Florida, is Wednesday's guest commentator.

One of two professionals in the lot, Mrs. Harris Ellsworth, is scheduled for Thursday. She and Representative Ellsworth ran their own radio station, KRNR, in Roseburg, Oreg., for 18 years. She's been cooking expert, book reviewer, style expert and announcer on the station.

Her favorite job was telling stories for the kiddies program. On this WRC show, she'll chat with wives of other western congressmen about the problems Congressional families are faced with in Washington.

Belasco Project—Oasis or Mirage?

Capital Remains Theatrical Sahara

By Richard L. Coe

A YEAR AGO tonight the National Theater was closed to living actors. This is a sad date in a Nation's Capital, the first anniversary of its only theater's closing in a squabble that turns on a minute but fundamental situation.

The theater is not in a good way. Centralized in New York, it now offers Gotham visitors only 13 plays. It's so hogtied by the unions that even the boldest producer hesitates to speak out against them in public, and led by businessmen more real estate agents than theatrical artists.

Across the land audiences are willing to go to the theater if only worthwhile plays are sent to them. So willing that one embarrassed company last spring had to return over half a million dollars worth of tickets because it had not been able to provide the plays promised.

Here in Washington one public group after another—and they've all contained some distinguished names—has begged, argued, implored, entreated that some stage be found in Washington, just one for despised Moscow's numerous healthy ones.

The parade of theater people who've come down from New York has been endless and, in the long run, heartening. Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, for instance, have vowed they'll play Washington this fall if they have to do it in a tent.

Senator Douglas has introduced a bill in the Senate which is the best try yet in the protracted effort to get the Belasco back to the land of the living. With proper liaison between the Senate and House committees in which the Celler bill has made some progress, there's a thin chance for the Douglas measure. But the longed-for adjournment keeps it mighty thin, indeed.

A cheering development of the year has been a confirmation of the fact that Washingtonians do attend cultural events on a nonsegregated basis. To the acknowledged success of the Catholic University and Olney Theaters and the tradition of all Washington concerts to all races in the audience, it's possible to add satisfactory records by two first-run film houses.

The engagement of "Anna Lucasta" at the Howard Theater has been extended, thanks to the capable playing of its experienced company. Mixed audiences are attending this play.

The Meridian Hill venture is in existence because all walks of life have contributed small sums to start the theater off. That's a considerable problem in itself, for putting a theater on the map is a long-term tricky proposition. Personally, I think it would have been wiser to have emphasized the existence of the theater, not that of a "Washington Theater Festival," which is hardly what the offerings have been.

But Meridian is a unique spot, delightfully informal, and though its bills have suffered from a late start and its audiences have been like all audiences—slow to register affection—the Meridian Hill stands as a laudable and still promising try.

Nor should one forget Judith Anderson's "Medea," which had the honor of breaking the jinx of a nontheater season. Its adventure here was a paradox: so many people wanted to see the play that their very numbers militated against full enjoyment. But "Medea's" primary service to the community was to prove that thousands of Washingtonians would attend a play on a nonsegregated basis.

Another aspect of the problem has been the State Department's role in clearing the way for the Howard University players to accept the Norwegian government's invitation to play in Oslo in September. Here you have the top department of the government recognizing a cultural aspect of the very problem that has blinded so many.

So, though the future for living theater in the Capital is still hardly rosy, the year without the National has put the community on record scores of times as innocent of the hatred, intolerance and intemperance that beleaguer the earth.

July Garland, inset far right, finds that quite a battle, below, between William Prince and Will Geer, in "Lust for Gold," opening Thursday at the Warner. To the left is Shelley Winters, featured in "The Great Gatsby," opening Thursday at the Palace. Judy herself is now on the Capitol screen in "In the Good Old Summertime"

Mitchell and Symphony End Series at Watergate

By Paul Hume

HOWARD MITCHELL has just completed the most successful series of Watergate concerts in the history of Washington's summer music.

The success is largely his on a personal and musical basis. It can be proven in two concrete ways, and explained in several sound assumptions. Last year's Watergate concerts, underwritten to the amount of $15,000, finished with a deficit of between $9000 and $10,000. No concerts were rained out.

This year, with an identical guarantee, the concerts will end with a smaller deficit. Again no concerts were rained out. Rain fell during two of the programs, interrupting pianists in both cases.

Earl Wild had to suspend operations during the first cadenza of the Grieg concerto but later was able to finish the entire work. Eugene List was rained out in trying to play a Bach encore during an all-Tschaikowsky program. All other concerts proceeded on schedule.

Attendance Up

IT IS obvious that if the deficit is less this year, attendance must have been greater, since some costs were much the same as in previous years, and others actually greater.

More money was spent on music this summer, with notable results. For one of the outstanding facts about the season just concluded is the amount of new and unfamiliar music Mitchell introduced. Mitchell's programming often set a model for summer concerts.

Maurice Ravel's piano concerto in G Major was heard for the first time in Washington. So was Mary Howe's Agreeable Overture in its new, enlarged version. Elie Siegmeister's Suite, Sunday in Brooklyn, had a local premiere.

A number of fine pieces, not often heard here came up during the four weeks: the Facade Suite of Walton, Ibert's Divertissement, Britten's Soirees Musicales, the little suite of Stravinsky, and the Brahms Alto Rhapsody are all things that would do well in winter concerts at Constitution Hall. More money was spent to secure finer artists this summer. Result: larger crowds.

Reseating On Trial

HOWARD MITCHELL reseated the orchestra, as many conductors do, to meet his personal concept of well balanced tone. I agree with his new seating plan as far as the summer is an indication of the tone. It will be easier to judge accurately when the orchestra returns to Constitution Hall and its full size in the fall.

The new seating is similar to that employed by the Boston Symphony, the New York Philharmonic, the San Francisco Symphony, and the Chicago Symphony in its great days under Frederick Stock. The violins are divided into two choirs, located on the conductor's left and right. This permits the tone of the second violins to be heard as a distinct unit, places violas and cellos in proper proportion and makes it

Stars Shine in New Orbits

CHATTERTON — Scheduled for Olney
DAYTON
ATWATER — Coming to Meridian Hill
DANTINE

THE new month brings two new offerings, with established stars, to Washington's two summer theaters—and a surprise hold-over at the air-conditioned Howard.

Tomorrow night Helmut Dantine and Edith Atwater will open S. N. Behrman's "No Time for Comedy" for a week's stay at the new open-air theater in Meridian Hill Park.

Tuesday night Ruth Chatterton, from the start of her career a Washington favorite, will appear at the Olney for a six-night stand in Dodie Smith's comedy, "Lovers and Friends." Stiano Braggiotti and Margaret Bannerman have the chief supporting roles.

The Howard is holding over its touring production of "Anna Lucasta." This is the Philip Yordan drama about a Negro family in Pennsylvania and is being play by Isabella Cooley and members of the New York and London casts.

Nazi in "Mrs. Miniver"

DANTINE made a solid screen debut as the wounded Nazi soldier in "Mrs. Miniver" and is to go to England in the fall for the sequel to that popular film which Greer Garson will make abroad.

He made his Broadway stage debut as Tallulah Bankhead's leading man in "The Eagle Has Two Heads" and has since been seen in "Shadow of a Woman" and "Whispering City."

Miss Atwater, active the past year in television and radio, starred in "Parlor Story," "The Gentleman From Athens" and "Deep Are the Roots." She appeared for several seasons in the long-lived "Man Who Came to Dinner" and "Tomorrow the World." Offstage, she is a prominent member of the Equity Council and has been active in the segregation fight which has embroiled Washington's live theater world for the past 2½ years.

The Olney's Ruth Chatterton first appeared on the stage at Washington's Columbia Theater in its days as the Capital's leading stock company.

Starred in 'Daddy'

HER success with Henry Miller's "Daddy Long Legs" is one of the legends of the American theater and that was followed by a distinguished stage career.

Miss Chatterton was one of the first stars to triumph in films, both silent and talking. A list of these would fill a column. She visited Olney last summer in "The Little Foxes."

Stiano Braggiotti, of the celebrated Braggiotti family whose Washington member is Francesca, Mrs. John Davis Lodge, last was seen here with Elisabeth Bergner in "The Two Mrs. Carrolls." Miss Bannerman, once a musical comedy star of Britain, appeared in the film "Cluny Brown" and on Broadway in "John Loves Mary."

Today and tonight the Olney will be saying goodby to Kay Frances in "Let Us Be Gay" and at Meridian Hill Park Theater Eddie Dowling tonight will be playing his final performance in Saroyan's "The Time of Your Life."

Bubbling Over

She 'Bumps' As Much as Code Allows

By Bob Thomas

HOLLYWOOD (AP). — Buxom blonde Marilyn Maxwell is faced with the task of portraying a "bump" on the screen.

A bump is a violent forward movement of the lower torso. This is a maneuver common among burlesque dancers. It is also forbidden on the screen.

That's Marilyn's problem. She is playing a bubble dancer in "Key to the City."

"When I heard about the role," she said, "I went down to Atlantic City to watch the girls in the burleseque houses. I got the walk down pretty well—they all walk the same, you know." I said I didn't know.

"Oh yes," she continued, "they all bounce around, bored and blase. One of the gals had a fascinating act. All she wore were little pieces of fruit at the strategic places. Every time she whistled, a cockatoo would fly across the stage and bite off a piece of fruit. It was fascinating."

Marilyn's costume is a flock of balloons decorated with atomic signs in sequins.

"Of course, it's established early in the scene that I'm wearing a scanty, flesh-colored outfit underneath," she added.

She has worked out a routine that gives a laundered approximation of the bump. "I move sharply to the side, and the balloons do the rest," she said.

She also snaps her shoulders forward, which almost conveys the impression of a bump. Almost, but not quite.

Marilyn's big scene comes when her atomic balloons start a chain reaction, and Clark Gable throws his coat around her and hustles her out of the joint.

Slim Young Radio Girl Likes To Sing With Tenors of 'Met'

By George Tucker

NEW YORK, July 30 (AP).—What would you say of a girl who was crazy about opera, who dearly loved to go roller skating—and who has never seen a movie in her life?

Especially a girl who has her own sponsored radio network show, who frequently has been seen on television.

Betty Clark is a slender brunette who lives in the world of great voices and dreams of herself singing like Lily Pons at the Met.

She has gone every day for six years to the studio of Julio Riog.

Sometimes he stands behind her and sails his hat past her head.

"You must learn poise," he screams.

But Betty likes it best when she sings with the tenors from the Met, who are there to have their voices checked.

When the P. J. Ritter Co. called to inform Betty that she had been chosen for their program on the ABC network she was very excited.

First she telephoned Julio the good news. Her mother was very happy. Then her father came home, and he was so excited he had a heart attack. It was Christmas Eve, and a week later he was dead.

"I never thought much about singing—for the radio, that is—until the baritone Francesco Valentino auditioned a lot of people at the Waldorf, and papa said I should go in it. There were many people there. But in the end he said, 'You have a phenomenal voice,' and awarded me the first prize, which was a $500 scholarship.

"After that I went on Kay Kyser's show, and was a guest on We the People.

When I heard her sing her heart out, and talk about opera until she was breathless, it was time to go.

She followed me to the door. She placed her small hand in mine, saying, "Who knows? I may really be at the Met, next time you hear me."

Betty Clark is 12. She is totally blind.

Barter Group to Intone 'Rock' in Luray Caverns

LURAY, VA.—Virginia's famed Barter Theatre, the Nation's only State-sponsored drama group, is going underground here in August.

The activities of the Barter troupers, however, will be subterranean not subversive. They are descending into the Luray Caverns to present a performance thought to be unique in theatrical history.

Deep down in the huge caverns, with an age-old backdrop of multicolored stalagmites and stalactites, the players will enact "Rock of Ages" at 3 p. m., August 4. The one-act play was written especially for presentation in the caverns by Montgomery Hare, Barter's resident playwright.

The "ball room" corridor of the caverns, 26 feet beneath the earth's surface, has been selected as the stage. It forms a setting remindful of the eerie caves and crags in Shakespeare's "Tempest."

Giant Auditorium

THE ball room is 200 by 300 feet with a ceiling nearly 100 feet high. It is the largest underground area in the Shenandoah Valley. In years past, many receptions and dances have been held there, and its beautifully fluted limestone formations have been the scene of some 90 weddings.

The caverns are naturally "air conditioned," with a constant temperature of 54 degrees. Few artificial stage properties will be needed, since the natural corridors and rooms provide entrances and exits, the stalactites form drapes, and the stalamites form columns and stage furnishings. Klieg lights will supplement the cavern's own system of indirect lighting.

The play, written in iambic pentameter, deals with the Biblical theme of Cain. He is doomed to imprisonment for the murder of his brother, and seeks escape in order to roam the world and seek his brother's spirit, the Wolf-Dog, the Woman, and Satan.

Present Schedule

THE Barter Theater, which has its headquarters in Abington, Va., is presenting plays at the Luray auditorium every Wednesday through Saturday night through July and August.

Visits to the Luray Caverns by members of the Barter Players troupe inspired "Rock of Ages."

Luray is situated in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, between U. S. Highway 11 and the Shenandoah National Park. The picturesque town is only a few miles off the Skyline Drive.

Graduates Continue Study

Queens College graduates of the class of June, 1949, have received 13 scholarships, assistantships and fellowships from 10 colleges and universities. A survey of the graduating class shows that 50 of its members plan to do graduate work at 19 other institutions.

Cross Roads Play Held for 3d Week

POLITICAL comedy with the gentle touch appears to suit the Cross Roads Theater. The Virginia barn players will be holding their production of "Strange Bedfellows" over a third week.

The Cross Roaders, at Bailey's Cross Roads on the Columbia Pike, present their plays Wednesday through Saturday nights. There's a bus service leaving 12th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nightly. Seats are reserved by calling Woodley 5303.

Setting of the comedy is San Francisco's Nob Hill at the time of the suffragette controversy. Florence Ryerson and Colin Clements wrote the piece, which had a full season last year on Broadway.

In Director Cecil Willis' cast are Harry Cary, Henry Oliver, Angela Nilles, Betty Rhame, Edith Aymar, Patricia Smith, Lawrence Clark, Rosine Riley, Mary Lee Clark, William McClellan, Bill Bowen, Russell McBride, Jane Drew, Frances Goodrow, Robert Kirby, Anne Drew and Joan Mull.

San Carlo Takes Over for 2 Weeks

Watergate to Offer Opera

Scene from Act II of Bizet's "Carmen," opening the San Carlo Opera Company's two-week run at the Watergate Wednesday night

Hizi Koyke in the leading role of Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" Thursday evening at the Watergate

OFF WITH THE SYMPHONY—on with the opera is this week's cry.

The San Carlo Opera Company, now in its thirty-eighth year, moves onto the barge down by the riverside to take over where the National Symphony summer orchestra finished last Friday night.

Starting Wednesday night, the troupe will bring five operas a week for two weeks. Stars for the first week include the excellent Carmen of Winifred Heidt, Hizi Koyke's Madame Butterfly, and Richard Tucker of the Metropolitan in Traviata.

Returning this summer is Vasso Argyris, popular tenor of the New York City Center Opera, singing in Carmen as he did last year. Mario Palermo sings in Butterfly, and Margery Mayer, originally from the Chicago Opera Company will be Amneris in Aida. Allesandro Granda and Rina Telli sing leading tenor and soprano roles in that opera.

In the event of rain on one of the five nights between Wednesday and Sunday, the rained out performance will be given on Monday, August 8.

Other music in town this week comes principally from the four service bands.

* * * *

WILLIAMSBURG, VA., not content with its pageant, The Common Glory, has announced an Eighteenth Century "Pops" concert for the Monday nights in August. Rain will send the chamber orchestra and baritone soloist into Phi Beta Kappa Hall of William and Mary College. Otherwise it goes on in the Common Glory Amphitheater.

Cary McMurran conducts, and Wilson Angel is soloist. The program includes Mozart's Marriage of Figaro Overture and popular G Major Serenade, Haydn's London Symphony, portions of the third suite of Bach, and songs by Handel, Purcell, and Mozart.

Ann Farquhar Hamer, cellist, will play a recital Thursday evening at 8 in Brady Hall of Catholic Sisters College, with Jean Slater, pianist. She lists music by Marcello, Shostakovich, Respighi, Nin, and Benjamin.

Russia Ships 'Bourgeois' Music to U. S.

By Claire Cox

NEW YORK, July 31 (U.P.).—The "decadent, bourgeois" type of music written by Soviet composers before the music purge last year still is being shipped by Russia to the United States to earn capitalistic Yankee dollars, two authorities on Soviet music said recently.

Early last year the Communist Party Central Committee in Moscow scolded Shostakovitch, Khatchaturian and a number of others for writing music with bourgeois, capitalistic strains. They were told to start composing for the masses, and nearly all of them have apologized for the so-called errors of their ways.

Not a Note

NOT one note of the new people's music has wafted from Russia to the United States, said Efrem Kurtz, Russian-born conductor of the Houston Symphony, who has introduced the works of many Russians to American concert audiences. He doubts that the first-rank composers are turning out anything but marches for the public, but believes they are still sticking to their old styles in works they are writing under the table.

"You can't tell a genius—whether composer, writer or painter — how to do his stuff," Kurtz said.

Michael Stillman of the Russian music department of the Leeds Music Co., sole American publisher of Soviet works, said it is too soon yet for the new Russian music to be arriving, because it takes a year or so to get it published and on the market. But there has been no let-up in the volume or the type of compositions which the central committee apparently has decreed should not be for the ears of the Russian people, he said.

"The Soviet State Publishing House is still keeping us well supplied with music that will earn lucrative royalties for the Russians," Stillman said.

Many Received

THE Leeds Co. is receiving many compositions — jazz and classical—which were written between 1945 and 1947, he said.

"It's not a bit different from the music we've been getting for a number of years, now," he said. "It includes popular songs, sonatas and concertos. We are waiting eagerly to see what changes, if any, will be made."

Kurtz said he, too, was impatiently waiting the first notes of the new people's music to waft across the world. He said he still is not sure just what the Communists mean by bourgeois and people's music and he doubts that they have any set definition for it.

"I know it would be a shame to have the supply of music from Russia shrink to a trickle, because the most important works being created today are coming from Russia and the United States."

National Gallery Exhibit—

S. Africa in European Values

"Cattle and Egrets," an oil by Walter Battiss, on exhibition at thhe National Gallery of Art

By Jane Watson Crane

AN EXHIBITION of South African art, presented or selected under official auspices but secured from private collections, opens this afternoon at the National Gallery. It could more properly be called "Art from South Africa," for the roots and many of the sources are European.

It is primarily a centemporary show, starting with a few nineteenth century works as prelude. Since it contains a little of everything, it sheds light on the background and circumstances which produced it. A catalogue foreword by Geoffrey Long illuminates further. There is striking similarity in the pattern of development to that of the New World.

The first artists came with the explorers, as they did here and in South America a century or two earlier. Notable among these was Thomas Baines, explorer, prospector and artist, in that order. During the period of settlement nobody had much time for art, either as producer or consumer. As the community began to expand and prosper, there was a stirring of interest, but the artists, except for those who catered to a demand for sentimental landscapes of the region, had a rough time of it at home. An exodus began at the turn of the century, with Hugo Naude the first to go to Paris. With his return came the first whiff of Impressionism. While the Armory Show roused the United States to works by Cezanne, Renoir and the rest in 1913, an exhibition of their paintings in the original was sent to South Africa only a few years ago.

Tide Reverses

IN RECENT years the migration has begun to work the other way. While South African artists continue to seek training in Paris and London, several European artists have settled in South Africa for personal or political reasons.

The South Africans do not claim to have evolved an art of their own as yet. But regional art centers have sprung up, most ambitious of which is the project in Pretoria. Art instruction is offered in various localities. There are some art dealers established, an art association and various galleries. One of the present aims is to improve the quality of the collections, giving the artists a chance to profit from the study of original works at home.

In the exhibition there is work by one native South African, Gerard Sekoto, a Bantu now studying in Paris. His painting, not unlike some of the social comment done here in the 30s, is tightly composed and executed. Of particular interest are the decorative compositions of Walter Battiss, based on his extensive study of native themes. One of the most creatively enterprising is Alexis Preller, whose "Basuto Allegory" in color and design is sometimes reminiscent of the early work of Rivera. A landscape by Le Roux, director of the Pretoria Art Center, makes one believe in his success as a mural painter, one of the few in South Africa.

Other Inclusions

INCLUDED is a painting by Graham Bell, who became well known in London. Killed in the R. A. F. in 1941, a book of his paintings was recently published in England with introduction by Sir. Kenneth Clark. Irma Stern, who was born in the Transvaal and studied at Germany's Bauhaus, has several able contributions. Notable among the younger men is the work of Francois Krige, who studied in Spain and served as an artist reporter in Italy and North Africa during World War II.

There are several pieces of sculpture, among which a few figures carved in wood stand out. Sculptors to date have less opportunity than in most countries.

Art Notes

Vienna Art Is Due Here In October

PAINTINGS from Vienna museums, which will be shown at the National Gallery of Art this fall, are now on view in London at the Tate Gallery. No definite date has been set, but it is expected the exhibition will open here some time in October.

The Lyme Art Association annual at Lyme, Conn., is approaching its fiftieth anniversary. The summer art show, one of the oldest established in the country, is the forty-eighth in the series. Consisting of paintings, water colors, pastels, prints and drawings, it will continue on view through August 21.

George Heard Hamilton, lecturer at the Phillips Gallery, is spending the summer in Nantucket, where he is director of the Kenneth Taylor Galleries of the Nantucket Foundation. The foundation owns and operates a hundred-year-old whaling era warehouse, remodeled to provide several exhibition galleries. Shows are changed about every two weeks during the summer. In August the annual open exhibition sponsored by the Nantucket Artists Association is held there. Many artists from Washington have been represented in these shows.

The retrospective exhibition of paintings by Oscar Kokoschka, shown here earlier in the season at the Phillips Gallery, is on display now in New York at the Museum of Modern Art. On view through July and August at New York's Metropolitan Museum is a loan exhibition of impressionist paintings.

Dedication ceremonies for the Carl Milles statue of Pegasus and Bellerophon to the Des Moines, Iowa, Art Center have been postponed until fall, when Milles returns from Sweden. The statue, which has been installed in the reflecting pool at the center, is the gift of Mrs. Gardner Cowles, sr.

The Des Moines center is one of the newest in the country. The building, designed by Eliel Saarinen, is one of the few completely modern structures housing works of art. It was formally opened in May, 1948.

Mitchell's Competence Proved at Watergate

easier for the woodwinds to be heard speaking from the center of the orchestra.

The custom has grown up in this country in some orchestras of massing the violins to heighten the richness of their tone. This may raise your emotional temperature while you listen to music. But it is not likely to bring you the music in clearly defined choirs of sound as the composer set it down. It is easy enough to secure full, lush sonority from an orchestra in any seating. It is much harder to achieve clarity in tone unless it is divided into balanced choirs.

Two Years Needed

MITCHELL has shown himself a brilliant disciplinarian in attaining rhythmic precision in his orchestra. The National Symphony still needs this kind of training, and will for a good two years before it sounds the way it should. The men in the orchestra seem to enjoy playing for Mitchell, a factor of inestimable importance in securing cohesive work from a band.

Mitchell's work with soloists has been skilled and sensitive. It is a great art for a conductor to carry a large group of players along in exact mood and pace with a soloist. The artists appearing with the orchestra this summer nearly all have spoken in generous appreciation of the conducting they have received.

Rehearsal time is always a problem in summer. It is not possible for any man to secure perfect results for a two-hour program when he has only two hours and 15 minutes to rehearse it and must give a soloist a good portion of that time.

Take Planes in Stride

AMPLIFICATION and airplanes have been with us as in the past, but the balance on the amplifying system has been at its best most of the time. Airplane pilots have done what they could, but no one would want them to take a single risk even for the sake of Dorothy Maynor's most beautiful high soft note. If we want our Watergate concerts we must expect our airplanes, too.

Yes, Howard Mitchell has given us the most stimulating, interesting, and musically satisfying summer concerts in our history. We expect him to do the same kind of work this winter when he has more rehearsals and a larger orchestra. In the time he has had, he has shown himself worthy of his new position.

Record Player

British Decca Enters Fold With 33 1-3's

THE record world is beginning to see some light in its present muddle.

Last week we announced that Capitol-Telefunken records would be issued in three speeds: 78, 45 and 33 1-3 r.p.m. This week word comes that English Decca, largest manufacturing company to delay a decision on slower speeds, will press its records in 78 and 33 1-3.

These Decca records have, since their introduction about four years ago, been the finest commercial disks issued regularly to the public at large. Their "ffrr", full frequency range recording, has proved the best in engineering and tone.

As it now stands, Columbia, with its 33 1/3 speed, has brought out what the classical record buyer wants in most cases. Telefunken, Decca and Concert Hall Unlimited are available in this speed, together with their parent, Columbia.

REVIEWS OF THE WEEK:

Debussy: Jeux: Poeme Danse. Symphony Orchestra of the Augusteo, Rome, under De Sabata. Victor 1276. $3.50.

Written for ballet and first produced by Diaghileff, Debussy's Jeux is almost his last orchestral work. Written in 1912, it describes the mood and motion of a tennis game. But forget the tennis—it is music, and fascinating in its color and rhythm. La Mer was written 10 years before this, Faun came 20 years ahead.

Nineteen hundred and twelve is the year of the piano preludes. De Sabata is a great conductor and his work in this music is brilliant—like Monteux or Koussevitsky, but with its own kind of fire. You have probably never heard this music, but I think you will like it. The recording is excellent. Surfaces are good.

Marshall: "I Hear You Calling Me" also: Lehar: "Yours Is My Heart Alone." James Melton, tenor, with orchestra. Victor 10-1472. $1.00.

Melton and his partisans need not complain of my suggestions that he doesn't know how to sing these songs. Just compare the older tenors with Melton and you'll see what I mean. Neither song is too much musically.

Opera Favorites

"Strawhat Concerts," a half hour summer series of familiar favorites from the repertoire of concert and operetta music and featuring the Columbia Concert Orchestra, are being heard over CBS (WTOP, 10 p. m.). The series will run eight weeks, concluding August 22.

The broadcasts have been invested with all the home town informality of an outdoor concert in the public park of any small American community.

Gilbert, Writer Of Hit Numbers, Clicks on Disks

If you hear a new singer named Ray Gilbert on your favorite disk jockey show, don't conclude that he's a Johnny-come-lately in the popular music field.

Gilbert has been writing hit tunes for the movies for years, and some of his numbers include "Baia," "You Belong to My Heart," "Zip-a-Der - Doo - Dah" and "Cuanto le Gusta."

After writing a new tune, composers usually sing or play an audition record intended only for prospective publishers to give them an idea of what it's like. Not long ago, a friend took one of Gilbert's recordings—without his knowledge — to Columbia Records and the result was that he was signed up to a recording contract as a singer. His first platter was "Coca-Roca" and "Pin Striped Pants."—(AP).

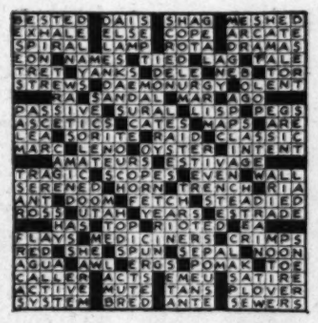
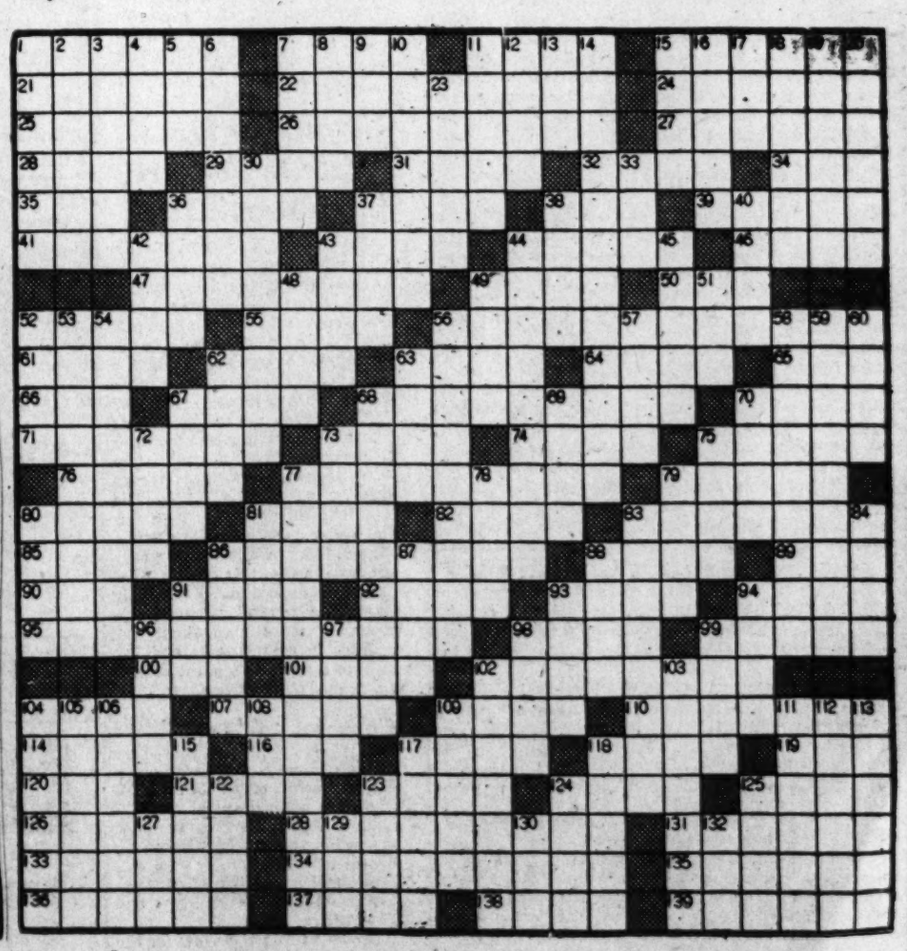
SOLUTION TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE





Nancy Osgood and Mrs. Kenneth Regan, wife of the Congressman from Texas, chat about the Osgood show (WRC, daily at 9:30 a. m.) which Nancy is vacating for two weeks starting tomorrow. Mrs. Regan will be substituting for her on August 11. She's 1 of 10 guest commentators, including Mrs. Charles Brannan, Mrs. India Edwards, Mrs. Claude Pepper, Mrs. Harris Ellsworth and Miss Drucie Snyder Photo by Reni

Mrs. India Edwards, executive director of the Women's Division of the Democratic National Committee, will be Friday's commentator.

The second week, the show will get off to a husband-and-wife start, since Christine Sadler Coe, Washington Bureau Chief of McCall's Magazine, has mesmerised her husband into appearing with her. The show will probably mix political events in which Mrs. Coe deals with theatrical lore in which Dick Coe is expert. The question arises: Does Mrs. Coe disagree with Drama Critic Coe of The Washington Post about theaterical matters over the breakfast table? Tune in August 8, and find out!

Others Scheduled

TUESDAY, AUGUST 9, might best be skipped. That's my day with guest or guests unknown.

On Wednesday, Hope Ridings Miller, magazine writer, will interview Dorothy Williams, former president of the Women's Press Club, on her new assignment—press attache to the United States legation in Luxembourg for Mrs. Mesta, new Minister.

Pretty Mrs. Ken Regan, wife of the Texas Congressman, promises a bipartisan program. She and Mrs. George Malone, wife of the Republican Senator from Nevada will "interview each other," on Thursday.

Drucie Snyder, daughter of the Secretary of the Treasury, will give radio her attention Friday morning. At one time on the staff of WBCC in Bethesda, she "graduated" to television and has her own program on WTTG.

Phonevision Gives You Your Own TV Movie

CHICAGO (AP).—Stockholders of Zenith Radio Corp. have approved a contract with Teco, Inc. (Television Entertainment Corp.), granting Teco exclusive rights to promotion and licensing of "phone vision."

"Phonevision," a project for which Zenith is seeking Federal Communications Commission approval, would enable televiewers to subscribe via their telephones to special TV entertainment which otherwise could not be produced because of its costs.

Television stations using "phonevision" would "code" these special broadcasts so that only paying subscribers could see them.

Teco, with Chicago headquarters, will act as booking agent for "phonevision," if and when it is okayed by the FCC, but will acquire no rights to manufacture licensed phonevision or television receivers.

A Zenith spokesman said a commercial test of phonevision would be carried out this fall in Chicago, with some 300 receivers connected. The test will run 90 days and will offer a new Hollywood movie each day, he said.

If a viewer with one of the 300 sets wishes to see a certain movie, he will tell his telephone operator, who in turn will connect the "signal" allowing unscrambled reception. The viewer will be charged $1 per movie, with the charge appearing on his telephone bill.

Zenith also announced it would introduce a new non-glare television tube in all models August 1. The new tube will increase picture clarity in lighted rooms by 60 per cent, Zenith officials assert.

Only Redskins Sign for TV

NEW YORK, (AP).—Television football this fall is pulling in its horns as far as professional games are concerned, but plenty of college contests seem in the offing.

Saturday afternoons will be filled as usual with the college games, both locally and on a regional to full network basis. Schedules are not complete, but Dumont already has arranged for Notre Dame pickups from South Bend. Both NBC and CBS say they plan a steady schedule, so does ABC, including the West Coast.

The pro situation looks like an almost complete tele-blackout. In the past these games, mostly Sunday afternoons, have been carried primarily on a local basis, but this year few will be in video. The general feeling among team owners is that television affects the gate receipts. So far the only team announcing local telecasts is the Washington Redskins.

Don't Rest Supine On Spine; You'll Be Telesquatic

Chicago (AP).—T-V fans may be getting "telesquat" and "telecrane," spinal ailments, Dr. Martin R. Stone, president of the Chicago Chiropractic Society, told the fifty-fourth annual convention of the National Chiropractic Association.

Persons who perch themselves precariously on the edge of their spine by sitting in a slumped position are asking for trouble, he said. They are doing the "telesquat," a name chosen by Dr. Stone.

"They sit on the bottom of their spine and not on their bottom like nature intended. Sitting on the large bone at the base of the spine can cause a low backache and other physical disturbances," he said.

Sitting in a forward bent position puts a strained effort on the neck vertebrae. This is what Dr. Stone calls "telecrane." This practice can cause severe neckache, headache, and eyestrain, Dr. Stone said. He suggests an absolutely upright position with both feet flat on the floor for good health.

'Grand Ole Opry' Again to Feature Judy Martin

The "Grand Ole Opry's" favorite girl soloist, Judy Martin, will return to the NBC microphone August 6, when she appears on the Saturday night folk music show as Red Foley's guest.

Judy, who began her singing career on a Decatur, Ala., station when she was a tender 11, got her first big break at the ripe age of 12. One red-letter summer her father drove Judy and two sisters from Alabama to Chicago for an audition on Station WLS. The trio, later billed as the Three Little Maids, made an immediate hit and it was while starring on a program with this group that Judy Martin first met Red. Judy has made several personal appearance tours throughout the country in recent years and has appeared as Foley's guest several times on "Grand Ole Opry."

Canaries to 'Assist' Organist at WOL

Art Brown, organist at WOL who does daily duty for the station, will begin a Sunday show at noon today. Accompanying Brown at the organ, celeste and piano, will be his trio of canaries—Warb-O-Link, Peter Piper and The Baby.

Brown will do the show for the Muntz Television Co.

Hope Says He's a TV Veteran

By Howard C. Heyn

HOLLYWOOD (AP).—Everybody can relax now. Television is here to stay. Bob Hope says so.

Hope is going to add video to his multitudinous activities. He's working on the format now. The Hope program probably won't be ready for telecasting this year.

The comedian recalled that when he was appearing with Willie and Eugene Howard in "Ballyhoo of 1932" on the New York stage a group of engineers came to the theater one night and took him away after the performance.

"It was all rather mysterious. We took a subway, and finally climbed some dark stairs to a television laboratory. On a small screen were some moving dots. If you used your imagination a little, you could make out a picture. That was experimental video. They had me step in front of a camera and tell a couple of gags.

"Guess that makes me a veteran, huh?"

Hope went into radio soon after, but not until 1938 did he have his own show. The network was NBC—and still is.

"Little did I know then how much I was going to steal from radio," he said with a sigh. A satisfied sigh.

He doesn't think that name players will harm the chances of smaller fry already working in the medium, or that vaudeville's revival by virtue of the cathode tube will end abruptly when the stars step in.

"There are lots of channels and lots of spots to be filled. And the daily range of telecasting hours is certain to be expanded."

Hope is working in the Paramount picture, "Where Men Are Men." His dressing room always has been crowded with agents, sponsors' boys and an army of others waiting for a chance between scenes to discuss plans or to arrange quick jumps by plane for Hope personal appearances. With all the present television talk, this horde is increasing daily.

"The funny thing is, they're all busy; they're all doing something that involves me," he said, looking puzzled. "With Bing Crosby it's different. His dressing room is peaceful. I don't know what he does with 'em."

She Cooks—Televiewers Drool

By John Crosby

THE oldest permanent program on CBS television is a cooking show (WOIC, Mondays, 9 p. m. D.S.T.), run by Dione Lucas, an attractive Englishwoman with an awe-inspiring command of cookery.

Mrs. Lucas' program, for example, draws from 2000 to 4000 letters a week, a figure that compares favorably with any radio program on the air, to say nothing of television programs.

She is a graduate of the Cordon Bleu cooking school in Paris, probably the most renowned cooking school in the world, the proprietor of her own Cordon Bleu restaurant in New York, and the only woman in the world qualified to hand out Cordon Bleu certificates, which she does to graduates of her own cooking school.

Her manual dexterity in front of a camera is enough to drive the average housewife to tears of frustration. Mrs. Lucas usually prepares two dishes—a meat course, say, and a dessert—in one half-hour program, and many of these are enormously complicated dishes.

She hates any form of cheating and insists on performing all possible steps right in front of the camera. If the recipe calls for a boned chicken, she bones one, keeping up a steady stream of ad lib chatter as she does it.

Naturally, if a lapse of time is involved—a cake that takes 2 hours to bake, for example—she has to have one baked in advance. But she prepares another cake in front of your eyes.

Once she did a brioche, a rich, yeast dough from which tea and breakfast rolls are made. Six different processes were involved, and the dough had to be shown at each stage. The brioche was shown after it had risen for 45 minutes, after 6 hours in the refrigerator, after 20 minutes of making, and at various other stages. Mrs. Lucas used 12 different masses of dough for each of two rehearsals and for the show, a total of 36 separate batches, all of which she turned out herself.

A Bad Moment

COOKING by stop watch, she admits, is a nerve-wracking business because, as she says, "you never know what food is going to do." And it all has to be fitted into half an hour. Her worst experience came during the early days of the show. Mrs. Lucas was demonstrating the preparation of a hot chocolate souffle. After going through the mixing stages, she reached for a pre-cooked souffle to show how it looked when finished.

Without her knowledge, a C. B. S. technician had pulled the oven plug and the souffle was completely uncooked. When Mrs. Lucas pulled the paper off, chocolate spurted in all directions. Mrs. Lucas, paralyzed with horror, kept right on chatting about its glamorous appearance while the souffle dissolved before her and everybody else's eyes.

While her fingers are flying around, frosting cakes, boning chicken, slicing eggs, Mrs. Lucas fills in with odd facts about cooking and food. She's likely to say anything that pops into her head, sometimes making the production staff a little nervous. Not all this information is practical. Once she explained that the best way to locate truffles in a forest was to follow a pig. Pigs love truffles. "Pregnant pigs, especially," she added dreamily. "Pregnant pigs adore truffles."

Housewives, few of whom have any intention of chasing pregnant pigs around a forest, had better not try to copy her recipes down as she goes along. Mrs. Lucas talks much too fast in her pleasant British accent to take it all down. Just keep your eyes on the screen, girls, and write CBS after the show. They'll send the recipe.

MRS. DIONE LUCAS
. . . her manual dexterity is exasperating

Loathes Jiffy Meals

TO MRS. LUCAS, her TV program is almost a mission. She is deeply interested in raising the art of cooking in this country and has nothing but contempt for jiffy meals — "something that cooks in 10 minutes and looks beautiful."

Cooking, she says, is a great creative art and should be approached with some reverence. "If cooking becomes like housekeeping, like making beds, nothing good will come out, just something unpleasant."

Housewives within reach of Mrs. Lucas' program have proved to be an intrepid lot. They tackle even the toughest of her recipes and then write in to ask what they did wrong when things don't turn out right. I don't know what happens to their husbands on these nights. Corner delicatessens may be profiting rather heavily from Mrs. Lucas' program.

Reds Split Student Unit In Germany

By Fred M. Hechinger

MUNICH (via airmail)—When I arrived at the picturesque little resort village of Seeshaupt, about 50 miles from Munich, the doors to the cafe-meeting-place were locked and guarded. A delegate of the Union of German students told me I would have to wait until the end of the secret session.

About 15 minutes later I attended a historic conference of German university student representatives from the four zones. It was to be the last such meeting, for after more than a year of secret and semi-secret negotiations concerning the admission of east zone students to the Union, the talks collapsed here last weekend.

The atmosphere was not much different from that around a big Four conference table, but at Seeshaupt there were only Germans, only German directives, only German policy. I was the only foreigner. Yet the split between the Germans of the three west zones and the four delegates from the eastern part was as clear-cut as that between the Russians and the Western Allies.

Westerners Saddened

WHEN the historic break became final—and it may affect German academic life for a long time to come—there was considerable sadness among the Western students.

To put the blame on the West the Russian zone Germans, just before the collapse, submitted a "document" admittedly obtained through an informer which was to prove that the western delegates had planned to cause the ultimate breakdown of the talks. When the original document was produced, however, the eastern version proved to be a clever distortion. The chairman said:

"If you want to work with us in the future at any time, you must make sure that student arrests in the east zone stop. There is no use in further polemics . . . We regret such methods as have been used by the eastern delegates. I see no further hope. We are sorry. I move the meeting be closed."

In all open and secret sessions the western students, though sincerely anxious to include their eastern colleagues in the all-German union, made the following demands: A basic bill of human rights to guarantee the freedom of the individual, independence of legal and police functions from the political parties in or out of power to prevent Nazi of Communist dictatorship, opposition to the compulsory political indoctrination courses now required of all students in east zone universities and active opposition to the arrest of non-Communist students in the east zone.

Invitations Unanswered

WHEN western students sent their first invitation to their countrymen in the East in summer of last year, no answer was received. After four requests, they decided to form the Union whether or not the east zone students would participate. They sent a final notice for the charter meeting last January 29.

On June 25, five eastern delegates arrived for a series of "secret" talks at the western university of Goettingen. The Eastern representatives said they were willing to accept the "bill of human rights," but added that it would have to be subject to "suspension by the vote of the majority." Since the Communists would have the absolute majority in the Eastern universities, the bill would never be in effect at all.

As for concentration camps, the students answered with brutal cynicism that they were willing to work toward having them abolished since it would always be possible to "arrange" for traffic accidents to take their place. At about that point the western delegates found a directive which instructed the eastern visitors to agree to all compromises provided they could work toward the destruction of the Free University in Berlin. The meeting collapsed.

Thus when the last all-German conference of students met here recently, the outlook for a common and acceptable formula seemed dim. Nevertheless the delegates labored to find a way in three days of constant talks and three secret meetings. Despite the accusations of the eastern visitors that the west wanted to engineer a final break, it was clear to any impartial visitor that the opposite was true. But it was particularly interesting to listen to the dialectic precision with which the four east zone delegates pursued their course. When I was told that these student-representatives receive pay as party officials, it did not appear surprising or incredible.

The problem of fighting simultaneously against the Nazi reaction and Nazi-type Communist bid for domination is a full-time job for progressive German students struggling to find the way toward democracy.

Four National Societies Set Annual Conventions

By William M. Stuart

THE SEASON for annual conventions of national philatelic societies is at hand. Many philatelists select this time for summer vacation and combine stamp activities with pleasure.

STUART

The first of these gatherings is that of the Precancel Stamp Society, Inc., to be held in New York at Hotel Claridge, August 4-7. The 63d annual convention of the American Philatelic Society will be held in Boston at Hotel Statler, with exhibition in Horticultural Hall, 300 Massachusetts ave., August 16-20.

The Society of Philatelic Americans, which follows, meets in San Francisco, at Hotel Whitcomb, August 18-21. The American Air Mail Society, last of the group of 1949, holds its twenty-sixth annual meeting in Chicago, at the Edgewater Hotel, October 7-9. During these conventions there will be business sessions, exhibitions, auctions, banquets, the bourse and philatelic matters of interest to every collector.

THE Civil Aeronautics Board announces that United States mail ton-miles flown by the 16 domestic trunk airlines for April increased 26.07 per cent over 1948. The comparation figures are 3,553,923 tons and 2,314,405 tons.

The 3-cent commemorative for the G.A.R. will be printed in red and released the first day at the Indianapolis encampment on August 29. The central design depicts a G.A.R. veteran of today and behind the figure he is shown as he appeared as a Union soldier. Across the top of the stamp is the wording "Final National Encampment." In the upper left corner is shown an hour glass with most of the sand in the bottom portion, and "G.A.R." appearing across its face. The stamp is arranged horizontally with a single outline frame.

H. E. HARRIS & CO., Boston, has just issued a new catalogue "United States Stamps, United States Possessions and British North American." The catalogue, of 128 pages with more than 1000 illustrations, is complete except for the great rarities. All major varieties in the countries represented are quoted. The volume is an excellent one and worthy of every collector's library.

WORD HAS just been received from the Liberia postoffice department that the long-delayed "presidential" issue was released in Liberia and at the Liberian Philatelic Agency, New York City, July 21. It will be recalled that the 1-cent value, portraying President Joseph Jenkins Roberts, was released in November, 1948. The values run from 1 cent through $1, a total of 15 denominations, all being regular postage except one value, 25-cent air mail. There are 25 stamps to a sheet.

THE Collectors Club, Branch 5, S.P.A., met last Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple. The bourse was very active. At the meeting next Tuesday evening an auction will be held, the only one for the month as the sale regularly scheduled for the third Tuesday will not be held

This School Stands for a Way of Life

By Margaret Walzem

RABUN GAP, Ga., July 30 (AP).—High in the lonely hills of north Georgia stands a school built to preserve a way of life.

Founded on hope, prayer and whatever contributions could be gathered, the Rabun Gap-Nacoochee School shows mountaineers how to wrest a living from their rocky land.

The Rabun Gap-Nacoochee School came into being in 1904 through the efforts of Dr. Andrew Jackson Ritchie and his wife, two of the first college graduates of Rabun County.

It grew out of their early struggle for an education and was founded on funds gathered from the community and Ritchie's friends from University of Georgia and Harvard days.

Center of Life

THE school has become a center of life in this valley on United States Highway 23, just across the North Carolina State line.

A community cannery has been set up, where equipment and advice are free to all.

Weaving, which was dying out as a home industry, is again common. It's taught in the school and to young mothers by some of the old mountain women.

Farmers line up on rainy days to learn how to repair their equipment.

The school gives an education to entire families and every student spends a part of the day in the kitchen, barn, field or shop.

It doesn't stop with the practical side of life. These rugged hill people learn to set tables, weave gay curtains for their cottages and live pleasantly with what's at hand.

In the summer, the school's swimming pool is open to all. In the gym, students keep alive the old square dances. Sometimes the whole community turns up for a hoe-down.

There is practically no crime in the region.

"When court time comes down in the county seat at Clayton, there's almost never a case from the valley," one of the teachers said.

Where once children counted their months in school on the fingers of both hands, a third now go to college.

18 Families, 120 Young

A LARGE part of the school's 1800 acres is divided into 21 farms, where families work and study.

Families are selected on a basis of need, number of children (last year there were 120 children divided among 18 families) and willingness to learn.

They may stay one, two, or as long as 10 years. They live in one of the 21 cottages and farm on a share-the-crop basis.

Fathers attend classes to learn modern farming methods. Mothers learn something about nutrition, child care, home nursing, sewing and sanitation.

In addition to the crops grown, each farmer concentrates on an added phase of farm life. Some raise poultry, hogs or cattle; others tend orchards, raise vegetables or repair equipment.

Their young children attend the nearby elementary school which receives funds from the State and county and the Rabun Gap-Nacoochee endowment.

Training in Stride

WHEN a student reaches high school age, his regional and vocational training hits its stride.

In a modified Georgian red brick building atop a hill overlooking the valley, he studies the usual high school subjects. In addition, there are four years of agriculture for boys and home economics for girls.

Of the 140 high school students, about one third live in the boys' or girls' dormitories.

Many of them live at the school because their homes are on roads inaccessible by school bus; others live away from home because school authorities decide it's better to change their environment. Some come from outside the community.

Rabun Gap draws the line at juvenile delinquents, but it does not bar any child who lacks the $320 yearly costs to live at the school.

Each boy and girl must work at least 10 hours a week; this lifts $2 weekly from the $30 a month board bill. Students may work additional hours and parents may cut their expenses by supplying food raised at home.

Girls can and preserve up to 5000 gallons of food a year and help take care of the chickens.

Boys stock the dining hall's meat larder through their care of hogs and cattle. Enough milk is produced to sell a part of it.

In the third year of home economics, six girls at a time live for six weeks in a model cottage where they alternate homemaking jobs.

"Christian living" is stressed at the interdenominational school, where students attend chapel daily. In the girls' dormitory is a "prayer room" where students go to talk over their quarrels. Girls conduct their own prayer sessions nightly.

Merged in 1926

RABUN GAP merged with a Presbyterian School, Nacochee Institute, in 1926, and the Presbyterian Synod contributes heavily to the upkeep.

Success of the experiment has caught the popular fancy to such an extent that several guilds in Atlanta exist solely to aid the school. The United Daughters of the Confederacy have given three of the farms and plan a fourth. The Rockefeller Foundation and chief stockholders of the Coca Cola Co. were among the first large contributors to the school.

O. C. Skinner, the new president, plans to make Rabun Gap even more a part of community life.

As money becomes available, he wants to improve the plumbing and other physical aspects of the school, then take in a resident veterinarian and improve the strain of blooded livestock.

And then one day, he adds, "I'd like to offer piano lessons to any mountaineer interested."

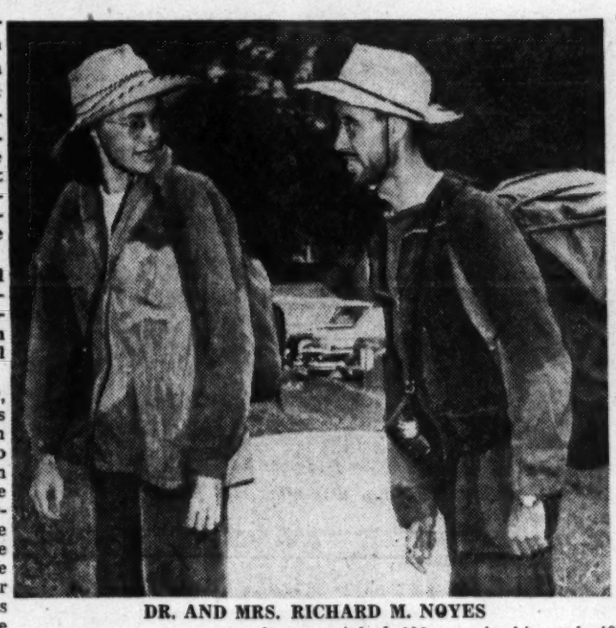
Black Bears Bearable, But Wood Mice . . .

FONTANA VILLAGE, N. C.—"A woods mouse can be a far greater annoyance than a black bear," said Dr. Richard M. Noyes, 120-pound assistant chemistry professor at Columbia University, New York City, as he laid down his 40-pound pack at Fontana Village, following a 70-mile hike on the 2025-mile Appalachian Trailway from Maine to Georgia.

Dr. Noyes and his wife arrived by foot in the Great Smoky Mountain resort, North Carolina, following seven days' hiking from Davenport Gap, where the trail enters the mountains.

"We walked 15 miles yesterday, after resting one day," Dr. Noyes said. "We spent the nights in trail shelters along the way, two nights at Spencer Field on Thunder Head Mountain before reaching Fontana. The only persons we met on the trail were four boy scouts who occupied the same shelter with us for one night. We encountered a number of black bears, none of them as troublesome as a woods mouse which was far more difficult to manage.

"The Appalachian Trail is well marked and walking is good," the professor said. "One need have no fear of bears if he will observe the signs posted by the Park Service. Bears will not harm visitors of the human kind if the visitors will not attempt to feed them, but leave them to find their own food. Bears seldom invade a shelter and are content to feed on scraps and garbage left outside.



DR. AND MRS. RICHARD M. NOYES
. . . professor weighed 120 pounds, his pack 40

"On one occasion, however, arriving at a shelter, we assumed that no bears were around. Being pretty well drenched from rain, we ate supper hurriedly, hung up our knap-sacks, and went to bed, leaving a few cans and dishes on the table outside. Shortly thereafter, we were awakened by a crash of dishes. Our flashlight revealed the largest black bear I had ever seen. Neither man nor bear likes a light thrust in his face suddenly, and we succeeded in getting rid of the intruder by covering him as far as a hundred feet into the woods.

"We had scarcely gone to sleep again when we were awakened by a gnawing noise inside the shelter in the direction of the pack suspended on the wall. The second intruder proved to be a woods mouse, and for two nights we were unable to get rid of this animal. On the second night, we suspended our packs between two rafters by means of leather shoe-laces, but found it necessary to do considerable mending on the plastic bags containing our food before we could proceed."

Visitors Flock to Shawnee, Pa.

THE verdant beauty and pleasant climate of the Delaware River Valley, which attracted early settlers nearly 300 years ago, is today bringing thousands of visitors each summer to the sleepy country village of Shawnee-on-Delaware, Pa.

"Closer to a typical Vermont village than Vermont itself can offer . . .". That's the description merited by Shawnee, located 5 miles from the Delaware Water Gap.

Shawnee has grown very little since it was first settled by French, Dutch and English adventurers.

An unincorporated village of about 100 families, it consists of a general store, a pocket-size postoffice, a community hall and fire house, and the historic Shawnee Presbyterian Church, established before 1725, and probably the oldest church in this part of the country.

Shawnee has no commercial enterprise, yet yearly countless tourists and weekenders pass through the crossroads community—some so attracted by its quiet charm and flowering countryside that they have made their permanent residence there. About a quarter of the year-round residents are businessmen and their families who have tired of the tension of city living.

One Man's Family In Many Mutations

Carlton Morse, author of One Man's Family, 15-year-old radio drama, has a new television script that has had a West Coast tryout and on Friday is to be transferred to NBC's Eastern TV network. It is "Mixed Doubles," a comedy based on the experiences of two young married couples living together.

One man's family also is going into television, with the first show planned for late August. At present the radio version is serving as the summer fill for the Cavalcade of America dramas on NBC Monday nights.

Interracial Council Theme of Broadcast

The history and accomplishments of the District Catholic Interracial Council will be discussed in the 171st broadcast of the "Americans All" program from 1:30 to 2 p. m. today over Station WOOK.

Dr. John J. O'Connor, professor of history at Georgetown University, will be chairman of the broadcast which will be in the form of a forum.

Fray Features Serious Music

Pianist-Composer Jacques Fray insists classical music need not be boring, and is using television to prove his point to more of the public. His "Music Room" on ABC Sunday nights uses the variety format so successful on other television shows, except that he features serious music and dancing instead of comedy and hit tunes.

Fray, who was for years a featured radio network performer himself, says radio has done "a wonderful job of popularizing the classics." But television, he declares, has a number of advantages aside from the obvious one of enabling you to see the artist.

For instance, he recently had on the show a harpsichord recital, "and I doubt that more than a few of even the most educated people in the United States know what a harpsichord looks like." Another program featured a lute. Each show includes two dance acts.

Guest artists have included Helen Jepson, Vivian Della Chiesa, Conrad Thibault, Morton Gould, Margaret Speaks, Mario Braggiotti and others famous in the music world.

Whistle Stopping

Now Just Sneeze Yourself a Junket

By Philip Orme

(Batting for Orval Hopkins Who Is on Vacation)

WHO SAYS people with asthma, hay fever or sinus infection have no friends except doctors?

Here's Barney Whitaker of Jekyll Island, Ga., to refute so crass a cynicism.

If you are suffering from one or more of those wheezing, sneezing and trumpeting indispositions, and Barney likes your case history or handwriting, you may be in for a jackpot—a one-week stay on a delightful, sea-girt spot where such tycoons as the Morgans, Goulds, Rockefellers and Lorrilards used to disport themselves and dream new mergers.

Barney, who runs the swank hotel on Jekyll, is led to believe the island air may be a specific for the listed disabilities. Seems he has an asthmatic nephew who stayed a week inhaling the tangy ocean breezes without any more wheezes than, say, Helen Traubel singing an aria from Die Walkuere.

There is a combination of salt air, sulphur water and aromatic pine on Jekyll which physicians have pronounced as good as taking the waters at a resort and sleeping with a croup lamp—and a lot more pleasant, Barney says.

The incidence of asthma, hay fever and sinusitis is extremely heavy in the Eastern United States. Jekyll's genial host may be drawing down on himself a flood of missives that will demand as numerous a secretarial staff as the White House.

However, Barney proposes to winnow out the names of 10 persons from 10 States (one from the District of Columbia, we hope) and set them up at Jekyll for a week. (Doesn't say you must complete in 25 words the phrase "I long to come to Jekyll Island, because . . .")

It is added that Jekyll, eight miles southeast of Brunswick, Ga., as the mosquito flies, though he's never had the temerity, is a year-round resort.

Suppose you had asthma or sinusitis and a substantial bank balance and a footloose status and you found at Jekyll you'd left throat crepitations and nose blowings on the mainland. Wouldn't you want to stay there indefinitely?

Barney's got something. He may be hailed as the man who knocked out asthma painlessly and made a pile doing it.

Could Ponce de Leon have been off his course searching for the fountain of youth in Florida? Perhaps his caravel should have steered north to Jekyll.

WHEN we were very young, our mother garbed us in a red bathing suit on summer beaches so we could be picked out of crowds, or noted and identified when going down the third time. In that remote day of somber and all-enveloping swim attire kids so bedizened made a shining mark—though they wouldn't in kaleidoscopic 1949.

Wildwood-By-The-Sea (N. J.) thinks it has a better idea, and doubtless has so far as concerns grown-ups. The city has opened a "tot lot" where squirming and sticky progeny may be deposited by their doting parents and temporarily forgotten. The little limbs will be "under expert supervision." They'd better be. No child worth its lollypop would fail to rebel at stockade treatment. We advise addition of a skilled anesthetist to the staff.

A grunion is neither the sailor's wife slightingly mentioned by one of the Macbeth witches nor a cylindrical projection from the side of a cannon. It's a fish. In July and August and along the southern California strand it comes "out of the water and onto moonlit beaches to dance," according to the ordinarily factual National Geographic Society.

Not really to dance, a NGS handout hastily adds. Mr. and Mrs. Grunion are on spawning bent. The female, washed up by the spring tides, deposits eggs in holes she burrows in the sand with a sort of hula wiggle. Then all hands wash back to sea on the next retreating wave.

If the hero of "Lost Week End" had been on a southern California beach at the right moment and in the right state of lubrication, the mouse-bat routine would have seemed just another B-grade fantasy.

The fish are running large off Atlantic City this summer, and here's Al Shropshire, past commodore of the Atlantic City Tuna Club, with the evidence. He's [illegible] measuring 6 feet 2 inches

Airline Brass Takes Over, Workers Picnic

"OPERATION PICNIC" was undertaken by key executives of Capital Airlines during a recent weekend to relieve the personnel of Capital's Youngstown, Ohio, station. Reason: To allow the station force to treat themselves to a picnic, Saturday night party and Sunday morning sleep in recognition of their outstanding work in exceeding revenue quotas for the past 12 months.

Upon arrival of the Washington substitute team, Bob Hamill, Youngstown's district sales manager, turned the station keys over to Vice President Jim Austin. Bob Averill, assistant to the president, went behind the airport ticket counter. Fred Klein handled reservations while his assistants, Johnny Anderson and Maury De Groff, practiced sales wizardry over the phone. Frank Howe, assistant to the superintendent of stations and flight service, brought planes to a stop with an old-timer's aplomb and executed his duties as senior agent.

Dude Ranch Time Hits New York

ALBANY, N. Y.—The dude ranch season is in full swing in New York State, which has more dude ranches than any other Eastern State, the Travel Bureau of the State Department of Commerce reports.

The first Eastern dude ranch was opened in the Adirondacks about 1931. Now there are 48 dude ranches in the State. It seems suitable that ranching, even though it's of the "dude" variety, should flower in the Empire State, for it is said about 300 years ago Indians on Long Island leased cattle grazing rights to white settlers and from 2000 to 6000 cattle grazed on the fertile hills of Montauk Point a century before the Revolutionary War. Today a dude ranch, in the same area at the tip end of the island, provides a "home on the range," for vacationists.

Warren County in the Adirondack-Lake George region is the center of dude ranching in the northern part of the State, where there are 29 ranches. In the Catskills there are nine, in the Hudson-Taconic region there are eight. There's a dude ranch in the mountains of Cattaraugus County in the Chautauqua-Allegany region in western New York.

Some dude ranch enthusiasts never mount a horse. Besides the daily rides, Eastern dude ranches offer complete recreational facilities, including swimming, boating, tennis, with the "extra" of comfortable, informal atmosphere. At night there's usually square dancing, with cowboys strumming their "geetars" while the caller chants:

"Balance to your partners all
"And swing that gal across the hall."

Old-fashioned hay-rides, campfire round-ups and amateur shows help the guests at a dude ranch to enjoy their vacation.

Meals are served family, or "ranch" style.

New York State's dude ranches range from simple ranch-house with a barn or two, to elaborate setups with cabins, bunk houses, corrals, arenas for rodeos, replicas of western villages, surreys, buckboards, as well as all the facilities of conventional resorts.

At the Bridge Table

Local Troupers Flock To Momentous Tourney

By Lieut. Col. H. A. Walker, USAF

TODAY, the twenty-third annual summer national tournament of the American Contract Bridge League gets into full swing at the Stevens Hotel in Chicago. No bridge luminary would think of missing this copious offering of master points at what may turn out to be the world's largest gathering of bridge players.

Col. Russell J. Baldwin, who has just finished a short tour of active duty with the Ordnance Department here is tournament manager. Worth 100 master points to the winners, the world master pairs event will be ably defended by a former Washingtonian, S. Gaston Churchill and his partner, Cecil Head. The world master team of four, which like the world master pairs is open only to players holding more than 30 master points and nets the winner 100 master points, is to be defended by George Rapee, Sam Stayman, Howard Schenken, John Crawford and Mrs. Wagar. In addition, there will be the world master mixed pairs, national women's pairs, men's pairs and amateur teams with many other national and master point events. Perhaps some of the local troupers to Chicago will return as life masters as Mrs. Gertrude Eberson did last year.

LOCALLY this week, bridge fans will find master point games at the LaSalle Studios, 1028 Connecticut ave., on Monday at 8:00 p.m.; on Wednesday, at the same time, several sections of players will vie for national awards at the Washington Bridge League's rooms in the Hotel Roosvelt. On Thursday afternoon, the LaSalle monthly matinee master point game will take place, starting at 1 o'clock. The second session of the women's pairs and men's pairs club championships will be in play at Arlington Farms Friday night. Saturday, at 1:00 p. m., the Agriculture Club will hold an open master point game at the Euclid Studios, 1355 Euclid st. n.w., Mrs. Stephan directing.

Meanwhile rating point games will be found as follows: Tonight in Arlington, at the F. Arthur Walker Club, 1511 N. Quincy st., beginning at 7:30 o'clock, and limited to members and their guests; reservations should be made in advance by calling Glebe 3347; tomorrow, the Federal Bridge League meets at 1300 New Hampshire ave. nw.; while the Count Club will be closed Tuesday, the Agriculture Club, limited to members and guests, will meet that night at the Euclid studios. The Chess Club will hold its usual Thursday and Saturday games for members and guest card holders at 7:45 each night at the Gordon Hotel. On Friday, Mrs. Stephan will hold her weekly open game.

THERE IS NO longer discussion as to which team of four from the Washington Bridge League is the best. On Monday, July 18, winners of the fall series and of the spring series grappled in the annual playoff with the Karpin-Spritzer-Murray-White-Koster team nosing out the Stone-Skinner-Poissant-Boschan-Tubbs foursome by one board.

National awards during the past few days went to Washington Bridge League pairs as follows: Arthur E. Lane-W. S. Benedict, Dr. C. C. McDonald-Miller Roberts, Charles Lovingberg-G. Arkoian, Mrs. H. G. Campbell-J. F. McDermott, Louis Fruitman-J. L. Koster, and Jenny Bryant-Dave Murray; half master points went to: Mrs. T. M. Boyle, Mrs. Harold S. Klein, John Fletcher-Simon Gerber, Paul Kalavski-Bill Shafer, Mrs. Jack Bennet-Col. Russell Baldwin, Mrs. Margaret Myrtle-Charles Johnson and Bobby Jordan-Vic Zeve.

At Arlington Farms, master points went to Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Richter, and Mrs. Walter Cook who paired with Lynn Carrier in a last-minute partnership to win her first full master point; half master point awards went to Col. and Mrs. John A. Geddes, Capt. Charles A. Stevens, jr., and Maj. Mario A. Ciccone.

Master points at the open game of the women's auxiliary of the Washington Bridge League were captured by Mrs. T. M. Boyle-Mrs. G. N. Poulieff, and Mrs. Jack Bennett-Mrs. Lester Gibson, runners-up including Mrs. Ann Scruggs, Maj. Mario A. Ciccone, Cy Katz and Mrs. Bernard Rosson. In its first nationally awarded game since reopening for the summer, winners at the F. Arthur Walker Duplicate Club were Charles E. Richter, scoring his second win in as many days; Jesse Duke, jr.; Dave Kandel and Clara Sterneckee, halved awards went to Mrs. Hal Cooke, Lieut. Col. Henry A. Walker, and to the seasoned team of Mrs. Elizabeth Count and Mrs. Florence Millspaugh, who are now testing their skill at the Nationals in Chicago.

Short Notice

Travel Agent For Actors Keeps Busy

By Bob Thomas

HOLLYWOOD (AP).—"I want to be in Rome day after tomorrow. Get me there."

A request like this wouldn't throw Ray Cardillo, whose travel agency gets many Hollywood stars where they want to go. After 17 years of it, nothing surprises him.

"Most of my trade with the stars is spur-of-the-moment," he commented. "For instance, I learned about the Bob Hope tour about three days before he was to leave."

He referred to the comedian's tour of the Nation earlier this year. The two air jaunts touched on 80 cities and ran up a transportation bill of around $100,000. And there was nary a hitch, except for a 15-minute take-off delay because Singer Billy Farrell overslept.

The Hope junket was the biggest thing Cardillo has arranged. He has also fulfilled star requests for hotel reservations in Long Beach, 20 miles distant. Nothing is too big or too small.

You and I may be thinking about vacations this time of year, but not movie stars, said Cardillo.

"They seem to figure they should be doing something in the summer—either plays or tours like Hope's," he remarked. "And I guess the truth is that they can't afford to be idle. As Hope says, 'I'd like to take a vacation, but the government won't let me.'"

But there's one consolation for the actors: their trips are almost always deductible from their income tax. They can be charged off by doing some appearances, interviews or business negotiations.

Cardillo has detected a trend in the travel habits of the stars: "They used all to go to Tijuana, or whatever was in vogue at the time. Now they seem to want to get away from each other."

He has to get used to the travel habits of the stars. For instance, Bing Crosby and Jimmy Durante will not fly, Frank Sinatra always does.

Most popular destination is New York. Most frequented vacation spots include Sun Valley, Palm Springs and various guests ranches in the west. And then there's Europe.

"We're booking trips to Europe the same way we used to book 'em to Catalina," Cardillo said.

Impresarios Would Ease Swedish Law

STOCKHOLM (AP).—Show business, which is often bad business in Sweden, is hoping for a new life through some legislators who have embarked upon a revision of the local entertainment laws.

With few theaters willing to devote a whole year exclusively to vaudeville, entertainers in other countries usually fill their schedules with restaurant and hotel appearances. But under present regulations in Sweden, floor shows are out.

No artists other than singers are allowed to perform "in connection with the serving of alcoholic beverages." This law dates back to 1896 and some entertainment conscious legislators have begun to think it's time for a change. They are aware, no doubt, that tourists to Sweden miss the night clubs and restaurant floor shows which lure travelers to most European countries.

Show people in Sweden hope the proposed revisions will untie some of the strings which have virtually bound them hand and foot.

Meanwhile, one of vaudeville's few sanctuaries in Sweden is the China theater in Stockholm, which from April through August each year is converted from movies to vaudeville.

The annual show at the China reached an all-time high both in popularity and quality during the war, when show people from all parts of the world were stranded in Sweden. Many of them have since returned; Sweden enjoys a certain popularity with foreign artists because local currency regulations allow them to take their earnings out of the country.

Even if the show depends on foreign artists for its main attractions, an increasing number of Swedish performers help keep up the China's vaudeville traditions.

One of Sweden's veteran troupers of international standard is Hector El Neco, born Nils Hector, who gave up his law studies some 30 years ago to pick rabbits out of a hat. A pupil of the great American magician, Dante, Hector El Neco has appeared in private performances for Sweden's aging King Gustaf.

The show's feminine beauty is provided by 24-year-old Marianne Schueler, of Stockholm, a former chorus girl who has emerged as a promising young dancer.

Miss Schueler was chosen "Miss China of 1949." In this capacity she appears on the stage in various scanty dresses to announce the number of each new act in the show. However, her dancing ability earned her a solo number of her own, dancing with provocative veils to the tune of Dave Rose's "Holiday for Strings." She likes her five-months stint at the China.

TOP tourist attraction in Charleston, W. Va., is the 11-million-dollar Capitol Building, seat of State government and one of the most beautiful examples of Italian Renaissance architecture in the world.

Designed by Cass Gilbert, famous architect, it was completed in 1932, after fires destroyed two previous buildings. The exterior of the building is Indiana buff limestone and the interior is of imperial Danby Vermont marble.

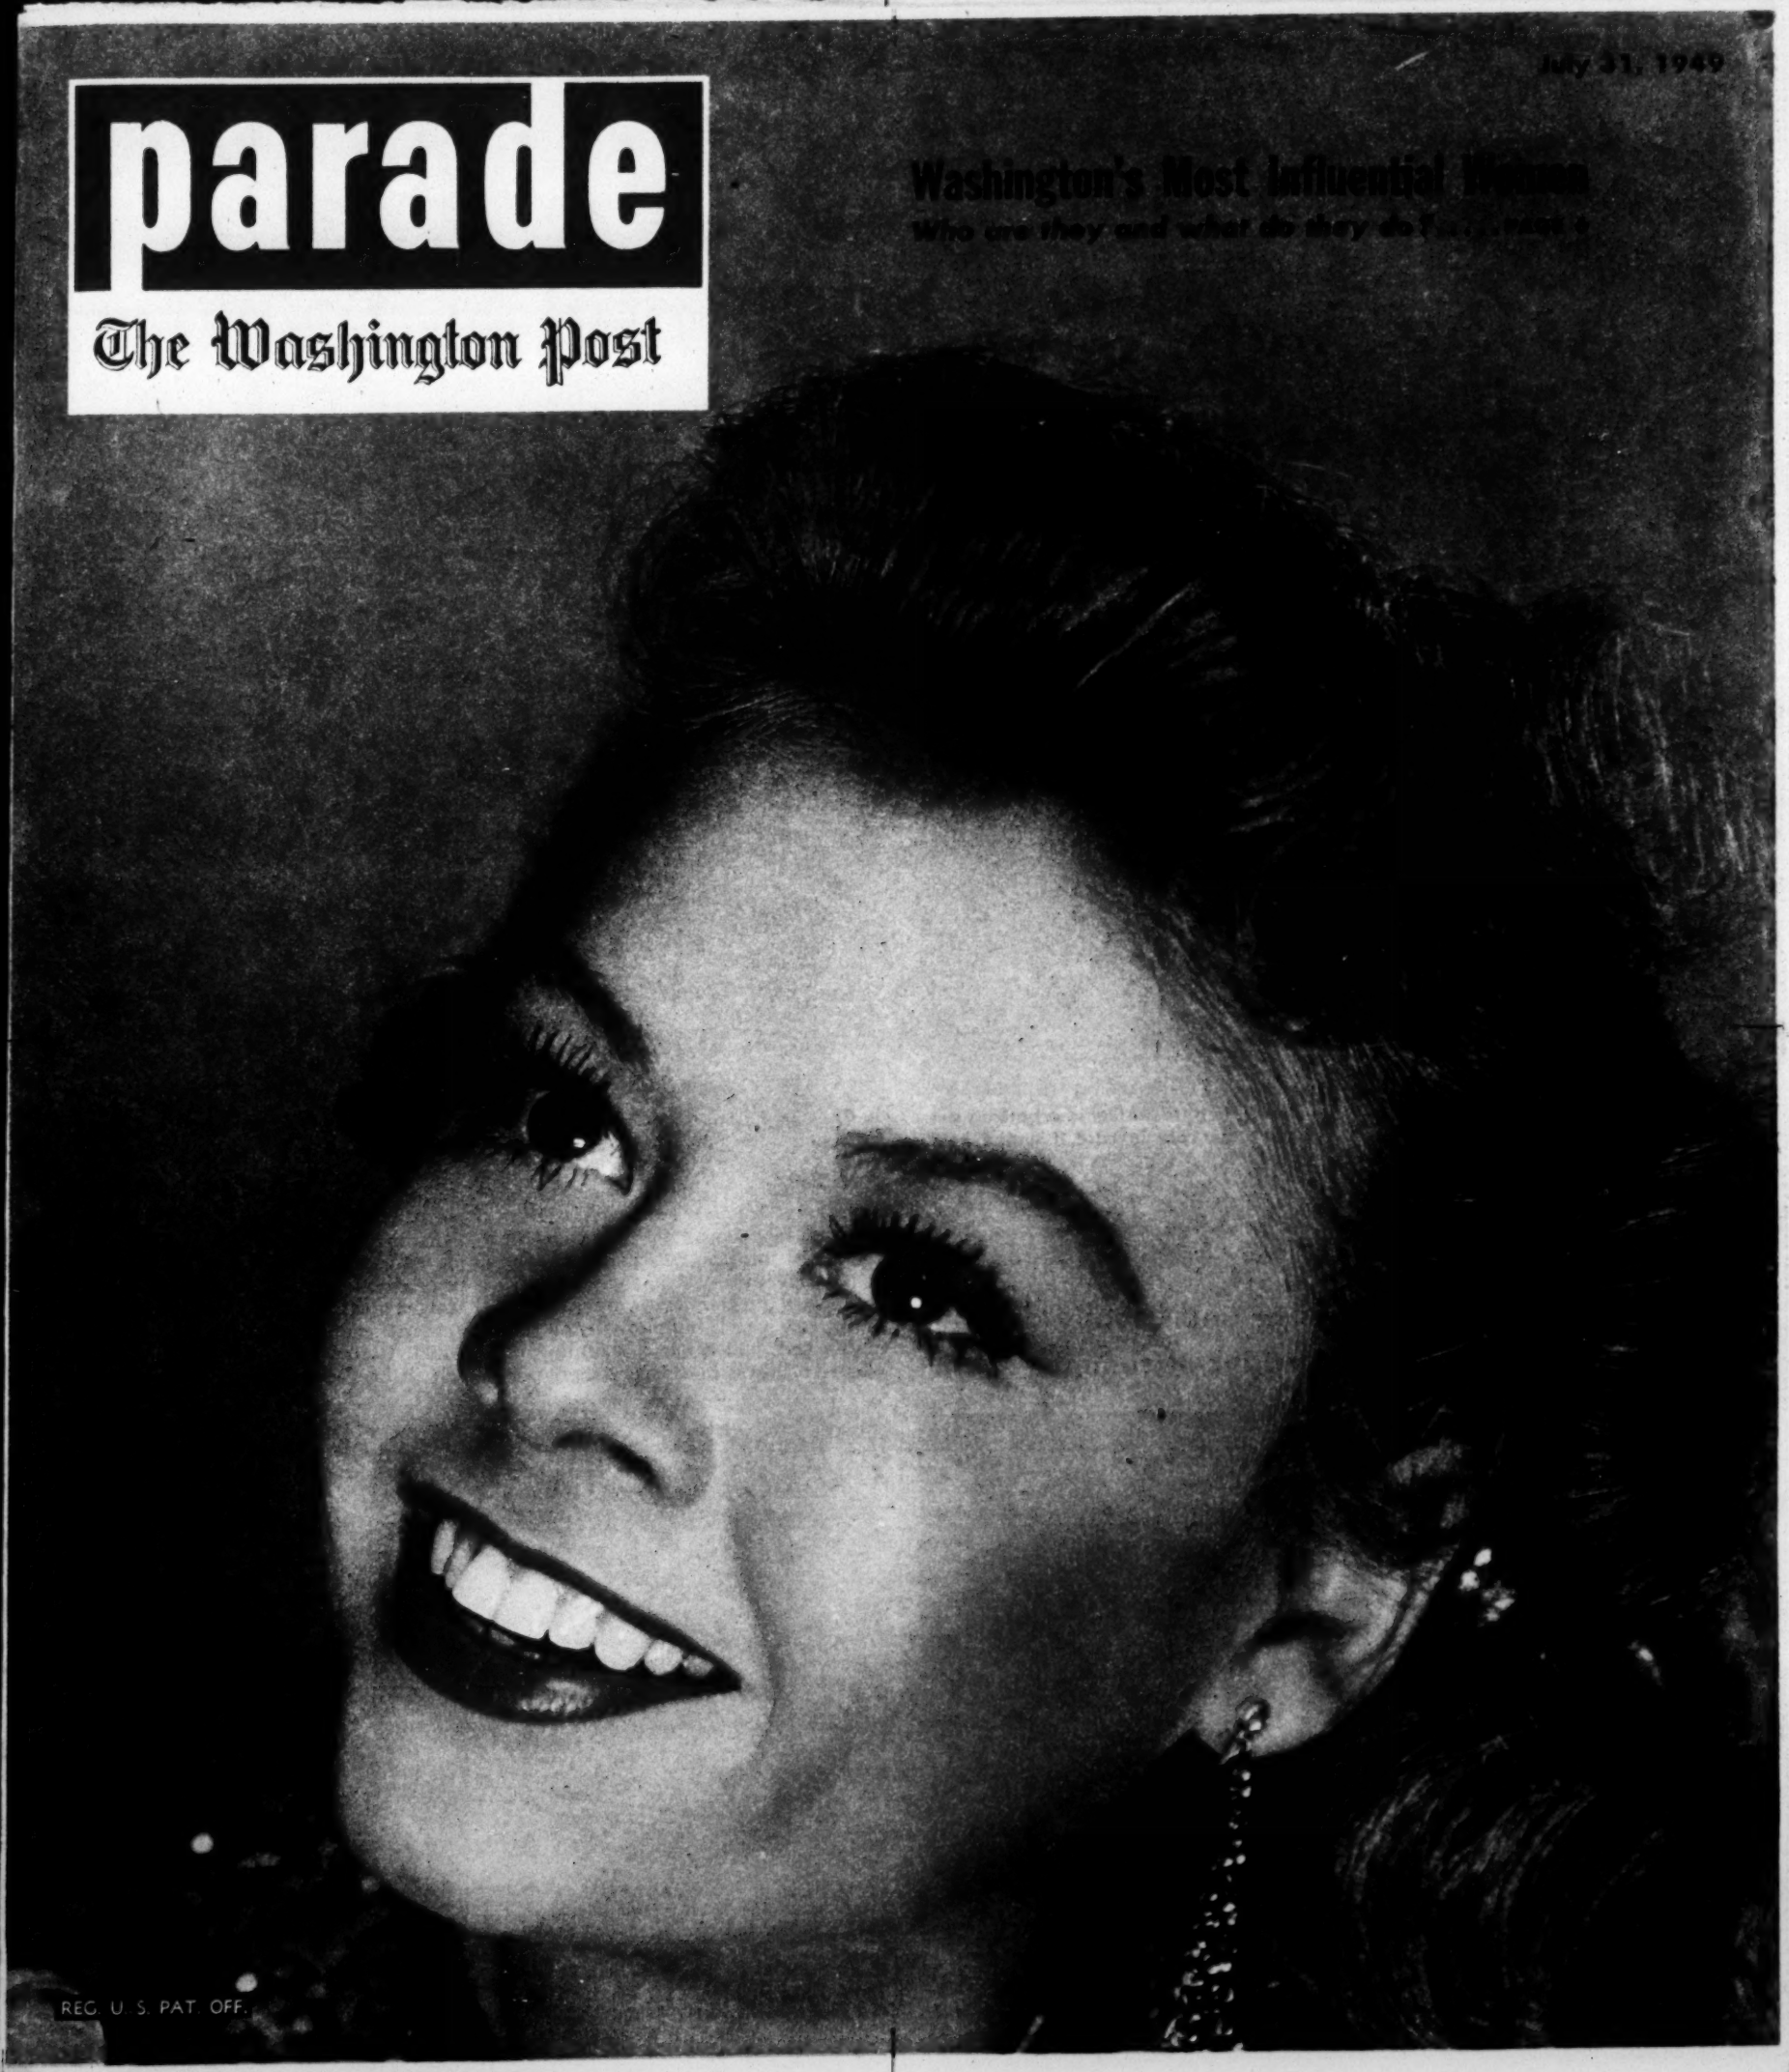
Washington's Most Influential Women

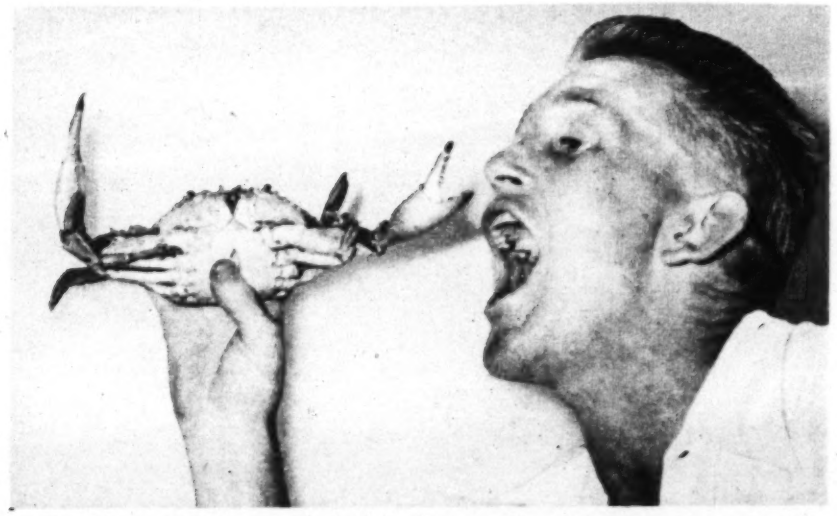
Who are they and what do they do? ... PAGE 4



REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

In Washington, a hot spell drove Larraine De Boe (left) to market in a bathing suit. But, aware of vagaries of weather, she wore a fur coat in case it turned cold.

In Detroit's heat, fans thought they were seeing double. But it was only Umpires Red Jones (left) and Ed Hurley getting a two-gun argument from Tigers' Bartell and Rolfe.



In Chester, Pa., as thermometer crept to 90, stevedore Larry Johnson won a $20 bet by eating a live hard-shelled crab, then claimed world's crab-eating championship.

The Heat's to Blame!

Anything can happen — and usually does — as soon as the dog days of summer set in

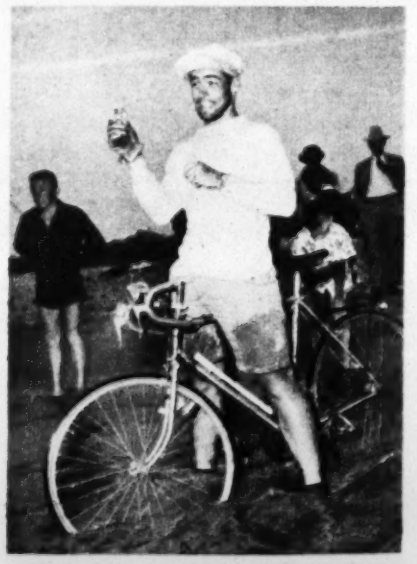
IT'S BEEN a crazy summer. In New York last month the thermometer staggered into the 90's and a jealous pedestrian bit a seal in Central Park. In Iowa a farmer awoke on a sultry night, saw something move at the foot of his bed, pulled out a shotgun and blasted off three toes. Everywhere people worried too much about the heat.

From Connecticut to Catalina people suddenly decided to move someplace else. In Florida, a mother and son started north in a wheelbarrow. In New Jersey a man started west on a bike. And in Ohio a heat sufferer buried himself in his icebox and stayed 43 days.

At Duluth, Minn., Arthur Mortenson fled heat, caught 30-pound pike, largest ever landed in Northern Minnesota's waters.

In New York, Sock, the polar bear in Central Park zoo got regular dosings during heat. New Yorkers suffered with Sock.

In Jacksonville, Fla., Mrs. Julia Roka St. Clair, son "Dolphie," set out for Detroit via wheelbarrow. "This is fun," said she.



In Santa Monica, Calif., George F. French, III, Princeton senior, dabbles in Pacific. He pedaled bike from New Jersey.

Make pie crust like Betty Crocker's

—easy with Crustquick! Betty Crocker pie crust mix

PEACH CUSTARD PIE

BY Betty Crocker

This fresh peach pie has a luscious two-layer filling: juicy peach halves and creamy-smooth custard flavored with brown sugar and spices. It holds its shape well when cut. And the pie crust is crisp, flaky. Made with Crustquick: our new pie crust mix. You simply add water.

Crustquick is our own pie crust in a package. A blend of Gold Medal Enriched Flour, salt and quality shortening. My staff and I promise you flaky, tender pie crust every time, with Crustquick.

Enough in each package for two pie shells. Try this delicious Peach Custard Pie:

Make.....Crustquick Pastry for a 9-inch One-Crust Pie (with high fluted edge)

Peel and cut in half....5 ripe small peaches or 4 large

Mix together and sprinkle over pastry in pie pan 3 tbsp. Gold Medal Flour
3 tbsp. brown sugar

Arrange cut-side-up on sugar mixture.....the peach halves

Mix together and pour over peaches.....1⅓ cups evaporated milk (undiluted)
1 egg, slightly beaten

Mix together and sprinkle over top....⅔ cup sugar
2 tbsp. Gold Medal Flour
½ tsp. cinnamon
¼ tsp. nutmeg

Bake 40 to 50 minutes in a hot oven (425°), until a silver knife inserted 1-inch from the pastry edge comes out clean.

Champions start young!

Philadelphia A's Eddie Joost acquaints son Donald (2) with tools of his trade. Hustling shortstop has four boys—spends off-season giving 'em baseball training. (Eddie started young himself, as 16-year-old in Pacific Coast League.) One tip Joost gives sons is—eat right! "For a swell year-around training dish, I'll take Wheaties, milk and fruit anytime," says famous Big League star.

Want your youngsters to develop the energy and endurance of true champions? Then start 'em young! See that they eat like champions. Include generous bowls of Wheaties, nourishing whole wheat flakes, at breakfast. Join the champions tomorrow. Have Wheaties!

Solid nourishment for your family, too, in these 100% wheat flakes. Yes, Wheaties give you three B vitamins, also minerals, food energy, protein. Plus second-helping flavor. Tomorrow at your house, serve America's favorite whole wheat flakes—Wheaties!

"Wheaties" and "Breakfast of Champions" are registered trade marks of General Mills

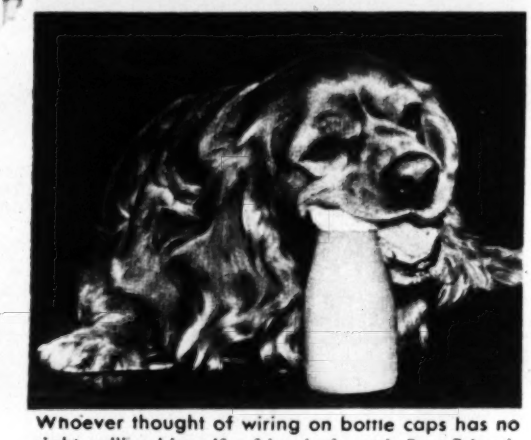
ON PARADE:

Irremovable object (milk cap) meets irresistible spaniel



Whoever thought of wiring on bottle caps has no right calling himself a friend of man's Best Friend.

If it's fair to put them on, it's fair to take them off. A longer tongue would come in handy, though.

If the pesky things would stay still and not slide around, things would be easier, or at least quieter.

After the revolution, when dogs keep men as pets, everything is going to be different. Much different.

The Turning Point

POWEL CROSLEY, JR.: An auto accessory built an industrial empire.

PEOPLE SOMETIMES REFER to Powel Crosley, Jr., head of Crosley Motors, Inc., as "Lucky Crosley." He had to be lucky, they say, to achieve success in so many different fields: radio, refrigeration, electrical equipment—and in the production of small, low-cost autos.

Crosley's own explanation of his success is slightly different. "I guess," he says, "I just didn't know that it couldn't be done."

An early starter if there ever was one, Crosley's interest in automobiles dates back to 1899 when, at 13, he built his first one—with eight dollars borrowed from a brother, and a battery-powered motor. It ran, too, a whole city block, and won him a ten dollar bonus from his father.

But this early success was short-lived. His father, once a wealthy attorney, lost his fortune. Powel managed to get through college, then drifted from job to job in the automobile industry. In between times, he brought out four cars: the Hermes, the Marathon, a three-wheeler and a cycle-car. Unfortunately, none of them caught on.

Crosley turned his attentions to developing auto accessories. He was especially troubled by the fact that every time a rut in the road turned a car's front wheels off their course, they remained turned, unless the driver had a firm grip on the wheel.

Borrowing money and materials from a backer, he set out to perfect a simple attachment to the steering shaft which would eliminate the annoyance. He nicknamed it the "Litl Shofur."

HE BOUGHT OUT HIS PARTNER

The attachment finally perfected, Crosley bought out his backer's interest with a note for $1,200 and staked his remaining funds on a trip to Chicago to try to sell the device to Sears Roebuck. Sears bit and bought, gave him an order, then a re-order.

As it later turned out, the "Litl Shofur" proved to be the stepping stone to an industrial empire. And all because Powel Crosley, Jr., "didn't know that it couldn't be done."

THE COVER: Vera-Ellen was such a bookworm as a child that her mother made her take dancing lessons to get exercise. The result: she's dancing her way to fame in movies. You'll see her soon in "On the Town" (M-G-M) and in "Love Happy." (U-A).

Inventor James L. Cox tosses a plastic ball which glows with flickering orange and green lights, goes out when replaced on the table.

Strange New Lights

They glow when jarred or shaken: a new discovery in electric lighting . . .

THE OBJECTS pictured above are electric lights which have no wires—a new discovery. James L. Cox, the man in the picture, is vice president of the Duro-Test Corp. of North Bergen, N.J., which makes fluorescent light bulbs. He has a father who likes to fish for salt water game fish off the New Jersey coast. "I told my father one day," Cox says, "that I thought I could make him some glass lures that would glow in the water when agitated. I began experimenting."

Cox succeeded so well in his experiments that he tried making experimental plastic canes for blind people. He took a walk with his wife one night and found she could see a cane glowing dimly but distinctly a half mile away. When he stopped walking, the cane went dark. The dumbbells glow when shaken. The small objects in the picture are the experimental lures, and lights to be attached to dog collars.

The lights are glowing here under the photographer's studio lamps. While plainly visible to the eye, their fluorescent glow—caused by friction in fluorescent materials- is much too fleeting to record on film. Cox thinks they may make ideal buoys for yachtsmen, may even be used, eventually, on automobiles and airplanes.

Washington's Most Influential Women

Little by little, women are increasing their influence on America's life and government

By MARY VAN RENSSELAER THAYER

THE NATION'S CAPITAL, where politics, diplomacy and society giddily go ring-around-rosy, is a natural habitat for women of power and influence. Each year their number seems to increase. Who are they? What do they do?

They hail from every state and territory, lured to practice varied skills in elective offices, as appointees to responsible government jobs, writers endowed with political acumen or wives doubling as behind-scenes manipulators of potent national figures. A few remain anonymous, the majority attain the satisfaction of recognized success.

In these thumbnail sketches, PARADE presents twelve of the many—having selected from divergent fields those whose personality as well as achievements, make them leading feminine contributors to the American way.

★ ★ ★ ★

MRS. HARRY S. TRUMAN: Since President Truman is rated the world's most powerful man, it follows his "boss lady" is the world's most powerful woman. Bess Truman's influence, so affectionately admitted, is as potent as it is unobtrusive. Hers is a shrewd mind with a realistic approach enormously helpful to a man beset with complex problems. Underestimated because of her determined avoidance of the spotlight, Mrs. Truman's true strength of character is only now beginning to be correctly evaluated. But she makes no bid for recognition in any aspect of national or international affairs. She expresses no opinion, answers no questions publicly. In Capitol social activities the first lady's pull is purely official. She goes her round, accomplishing required chores amiably but without sparkle or attempted glamour. Her husband and family are her sole, absorbing interest. Through this close tie to the man now President of the United States, Bess Truman, though she would be first of all women to deny it, definitely takes title as the most influential woman in Washington—the world's capital.

★ ★ ★ ★

FRIEDA HENNOCK, New York corporation lawyer, gave up a six figure income to serve as first woman Federal Communications Commissioner. Her job is to control the air. The Federal Communications Commission supervises sixty million radio sets, 2,300 broadcasting stations, 68 ultra high television stations in addition to all telephones, telegraph facilities and some 150,000 special services which include police, fire, ship-to-shore communication.

Miss Hennock makes an average of sixty daily decisions. The problems submitted to her shrewd legal mind run gamut from the technical to the more abstract, such as the advisability of permitting broadcasters to editorialize.

★ ★ ★ ★

INDIA EDWARDS: Because she is executive director of the Women's Division of the Democratic National Committee she has the unique opportunity of suggesting names for high government appointment. Her most recent political placing triumph was the appointment of Georgia Neese Clark as first woman treasurer of the United States. Always a staunch Democrat though many years Woman's Editor of the Chicago Tribune, India breathed new life into faltering Democrat women. India's fascinating name happened because a grandfather never found time to visit the country of his dreams.

RUTH SHIPLEY: Last year her signature was written firmly on 250,000 U.S. passports. In 1949, tourists crowding overseas will up this boom to 300,000.

For twenty-one years, slight, decisive Mrs. Shipley has been the almost monastically anonymous chief of the State Department's Passport Division. Under her command come New York and San Francisco branch offices, 3,900 clerks of state, a Washington staff of three hundred, while every U.S. Consul scattered over the globe bends to her demand. Her division not only grants and refuses passports but prepares data for government prosecution of passport violations.

The committee's published findings, much of them rewritten by Frances Bolton, are "must" reading for State Department officials while the Commissioner of Education wants to distribute them nationally to all teachers. Her Bolton Act created the U.S. Cadet Nurse Corps which trained 105,000 girls. Recently she's spearheaded a substitute housing bill aimed at providing units for the $3,000 income group.

MARGARET CHASE SMITH, Maine Republican, is the second woman elected Senator in her own right. (Democrat Hattie Caraway, once appointed, twice elected, was the first.) Through years of service as Representative, her political interests have been slanted in aid of her own sex. She has been nicknamed the "Mother of the Waves," and largely through her efforts, women in the armed services were granted regular, instead of reserve status.

In the 80th Congress the then Representative Smith introduced legislation designed to support a reserve training program, pensioning and physical disability payments for all U.S. reserves. In the current congress, all were passed and the physical disability bill became the Smith Act.

FRANCES PERKINS, Secretary of Labor during Franklin D. Roosevelt's administrations, the only woman to achieve cabinet status, is still a Washington power. Three years ago President Truman appointed her one of three commissioners of the U.S. Civil Service. Her new function utilizes to the utmost Miss Perkins' wide labor experience and understanding of human nature. She plans policy for the central personnel division which examines as well as recruits personnel for non-military government jobs. Her judgment affects 2,122,600 Civil Service employees.

As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, she knows, literally, the ECA Bill inside out, specializes on problems affecting our foreign policy. Nationally, her most compelling constituent appeal is an expert knowledge of consumer difficulties and a fair minded handling of race relations. Never short on facts, Mrs. Douglas can marshal them in impressive array on the most unexpected occasions.

MARY McLEOD BETHUNE, one of seventeen children born to slave parents, 73 years ago walked four miles daily to a South Carolina School. Her education was completed with the help of scholarships, and in 1904, with capital of $1.50, she opened her own school for girls in a rented Florida cottage. Today, co-educational Bethune-Cookman is an accredited Junior College, its fourteen campus buildings valued at a million dollars.

Onward, always upward during the depression, Mrs. Bethune directed the Negro division of the National Youth Administration. A member of the Hoover Commission on child welfare, she's been vice-president of the National Council for Negro Women. For distinguished service to race and nation she received the Francis A. DOROTHY FOSDICK, still in her thirties, is the sole woman on the State Department's nine-man policy planning staff. This important unit functions like a military general staff, initiating long range planning of American foreign policy. A doctor of philosophy degree in public laws and a stint teaching political science at Smith College have equipped her admirably to prepare studies, reports and evaluate information. Her seven-year State Department service includes jobs as assistant to the Director of the Office of United Nations Affairs and adviser to several delegations at the United Nations Assembly.

In 1912 she was active in the foundation of New York's first maternity centers. During the twenties Mrs. Meyer commenced a long tenure heading the Westchester County Recreation Commission. In the depression her series of articles on the WPA were widely publicized, while wartime reports on lagging production and poor morale in war industries set off a congressional investigation. Impressions of Mrs. Meyer's tour of wartime America were published in a book entitled "Journey Through Chaos." During his first term, President Truman endorsed her plan for a new federal welfare agency which later was recommended to Congress as the Taft-Fulbright Bill.

Through the medium of her husband's newspaper, The Washington Post, Mrs. Meyer's clear reports on racial, religious problems and, more recently, on experiments in socialized medicine, have made an impression on national public thinking.

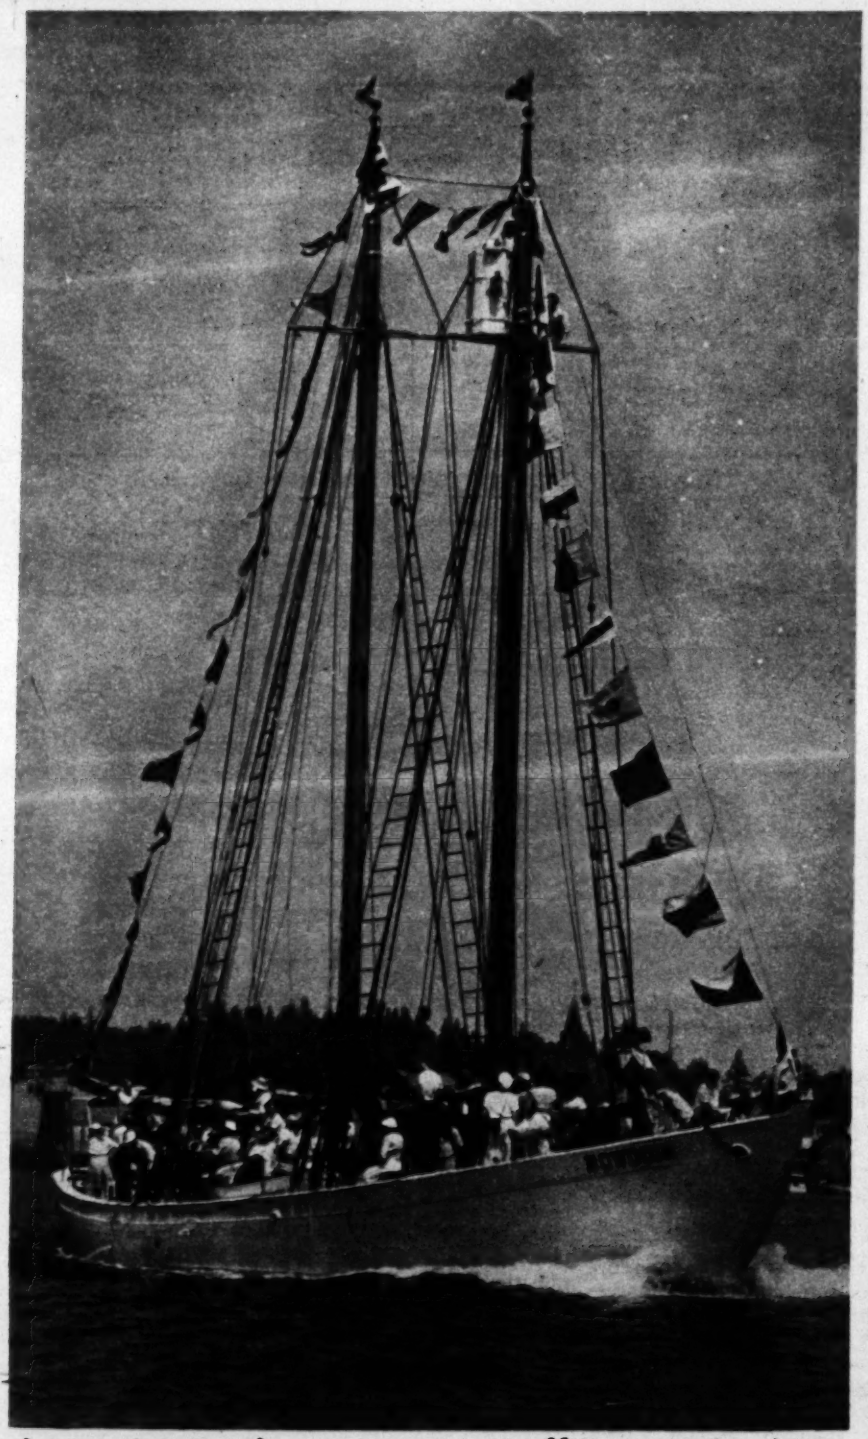
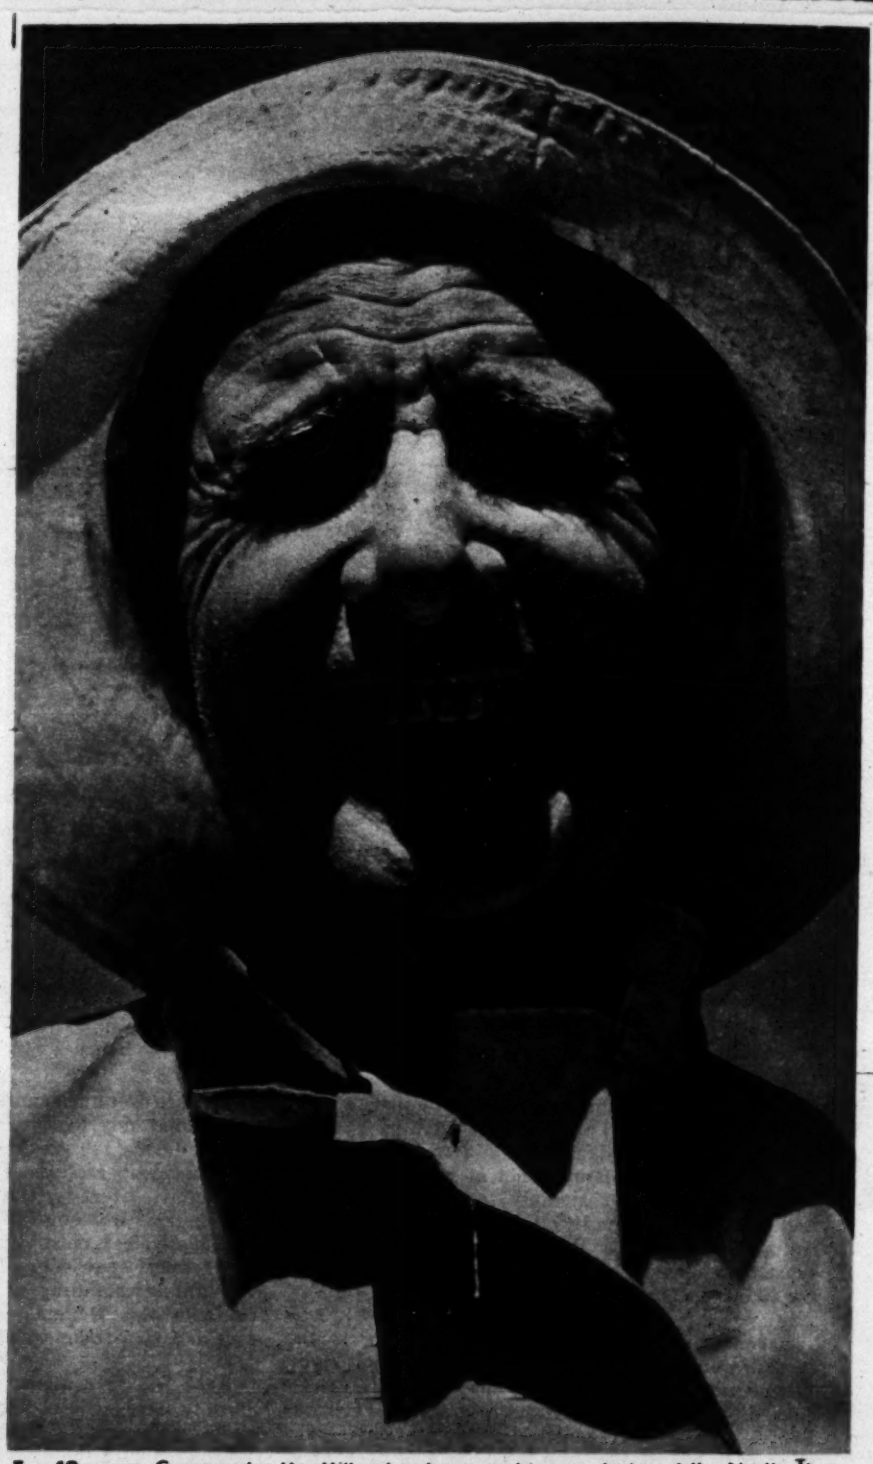
Her husband's most trusted campaigner, she's kept politically activated through her personally launched forum, the International Affairs Committee, which meets monthly in New York at the Women's National Republican Club.

Though solidly Republican since pre-war days, she's fought isolationism, the Neutrality Act and carried on Representative Bacon's work for world government through the World Federalists and, more recently, the Atlantic Union Committee.



A veteran herself of 18 voyages to the Arctic, the 88-foot, thick-hulled schooner Bowdoin is carrying explorer Donald B. MacMillan on a new expedition to the North.



For 40 years, Commander MacMillan has been probing mysteries of the North. This summer he is carrying a Geiger counter—something new in shipboard equipment.

It's North Again for MacMillan

By EMILE SCHURMACHER

"CAPT'N MAC" IS BACK in the Arctic again. An explorers' explorer if there ever was one, "Capt'n Mac" is none other than 74-year-old Commander Donald B. MacMillan, a wiry veteran of 27 expeditions to the north polar regions.

With the Commander at the helm, the 88-foot schooner Bowdoin nosed out of Maine's Boothbay Harbor late last month to carry her master northward on his 28th fact-finding trip to the Arctic.

Principal goal of this summer's expedition—which is sponsored by Bowdoin College—is to penetrate the chilly waters of Baffin Island's Cumberland Gulf—and to hunt for uranium.

For the first time in the 40 years that he has been exploring the north, Commander MacMillan is carrying a Geiger counter. If there is uranium in the frozen wastelands, he's out to find it. He's also out to collect specimens of bird and animal life and to chart unknown waters.

"Why, there's one section of coastline at least 300 miles long which is quite unknown to the governments most interested: Canada and the U.S.," Macmillan explains. "It is a section which is of the greatest importance to hemispheric defense for it contains fjords and bays large enough to shelter all the navies of the world."

Officials of both governments expect to know more of the nature of this mystery land by the time MacMillan and his crew of college men return to their home port from their 8,000 mile voyage in September.

His weather-beaten features belying his years, MacMillan is confident that the Bowdoin will carry the party safely anywhere it chooses to venture.

"There was many a time," he recounts, "when I thought the Bowdoin would never live to sail again. But she's got a double hull of Australian ironwood. She's sheathed with steel, and she's taken some of the worst punishment that the arctic has to offer.

"You might say that she's one of the most useful of all keys to help unlock the secrets of the north. And you'd be surprised to know how many secrets there still are up there despite the fact that the airplane, during the past 24 years, has brought the north virtually to our back door."

When it comes to talking about the secrets of the Arctic, MacMillan is as enthusiastic today as he was

"Explorers' explorer" carries Geiger counter in a search for uranium on his newest expedition to the Arctic back in 1908 when, at 34, he made his first trip north with Commander Robert E. Peary.

Perhaps it is because he is especially curious about them himself that MacMillan likes most to speculate on the ethnological and archeological mysteries that abound in the north.

"The history of the Eskimos is really still unknown, although the popular belief is that they originally came from Asia," he points out.

"But when and why? To this day, it has never been definitely established that the Eskimos really did come from Asia, although we classify them as Mongolians.

"They themselves apparently know nothing of their own origin, though during the past three decades in which I have known them many have shed some light on the Vikings."

This brings MacMillan to one of the real mysteries of the Arctic regions.

"The belief is widespread that the Vikings explored the coast of North America long before the voyage of Columbus. But while there are some 60 ancient sagas in which such explorations are mentioned, and on our own northeastern coasts archeologists have discovered the remains of stone houses similar to those found in Iceland, no genuine artifacts—instruments, tools or utensils—used by the Vikings have ever been discovered."

ESKIMOS HAVE CLUES

The Eskimos have no evidence, but they do have clues to offer the explorer, MacMillan believes.

"On many occasions, when talking to Eskimos, they have pointed out caves in which they claim the 'men who came from across the sea in boats' took refuge.

"They have also shown me cliffs on which the Vikings, apparently mortal enemies of the Eskimos, ostensibly were driven and besieged until they starved to death."

During the 40 years that he has been sailing north in the search for answers to some of these problems, the Arctic has not always dealt gently with Commander MacMillan. On an expedition to disprove the existence of "Crocker Land" just prior to World War I, he lost his ship Diana in the ice, and he and his men disappeared—given up for lost by the outside world. Eventually, after two relief ships had failed to get through, he was rescued by the late Captain Bob Bartlett aboard the sealer Neptune. The experience failed to dim "Cap'n Mac's" interest in returning. Three years later, he sailed north once again.

The secrets of the north and the near-north have been the subject of countless books—some learned, some not. MacMillan himself has counted and classified some 22,000 different volumes and admits that there are thousands more.

It is not surprising that out of this rash of manuscripts has come confusion as well as order. "One of the most amazing things," declares veteran explorer MacMillan, "is that there is still much to be unlearned as well as learned about the north."

Chief assistant and historian for the expedition is MacMillan's wife, Miriam. She expects to gather material to write a book, her second.

Small Helpings Help Appetites Grow So-o-o Big!

Never overload baby's dish, say feeding experts. Even when he's old enough for Junior Foods, small portions cut down coaxing, help build up appetites.

Here's the easy way! Get Gerber's Junior Foods (same size container as the Strained). It encourages baby to eat small helpings of several True-Flavor Gerber's at each meal. And that variety is good for Junior.

Ahhh! TRUE-Flavor certainly makes a big difference. Years of making nothing but baby foods have taught us how to retain the true, fresh flavor of first-rate fruits, vegetables and meats.

And, just-right Texture! Baby's sure to get that too. From starting Cereals through Junior Foods, Gerber's have Perfected-Texture which pleases babies and doctors. Even the new meats have it!

EASY CHAIR MAKES FEEDING EASIER

Baby enjoys his bottle—or spoon-fed foods far more if you're comfortably settled.

SPEAKING OF FOOD: Menu-planning for Baby's so easy with Gerber's. No other baby foods offer such complete, nourishing, good-tasting variety. 3 Cereals, 21 Strained Foods, 15 Junior Foods and—3 Strained Meats, 3 Junior Meats. All ready to serve!

CRIB TIPS

Baby spends so much time in his bed, you want to be sure he's comfy as can be. Here are some tips for baby's comfort and your convenience.

Avoid drafts. Place Baby's crib where there's plenty of fresh air but no dangerous cross-currents.

Waterproof sheeting should be large enough to cover the whole mattress. A material that can be boiled helps avoid diaper rash.

Mattress pads should be washed fairly often. If stained, soak the pad in clear, cool water for half an hour before washing with thick suds.

FREE "EATS." Send for samples of Gerber's 3 Cereals, ready to serve. Write Dept.647A-9, Fremont, Michigan.

All Gerber's are accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

Ten funniest movie scenes

Hold your sides! You'll be laughing all over again at some of the funniest movie scenes ever made in next week's issue of PARADE. Try to recall some of the hilarious scenes you liked, and see if they're included.

FAMILY SIDECAR: these riders are using a duplex sidecar which sells for $330, lets a husband and wife bring children along in rumble seat.

BOOM IN MOTORCYCLES

IN THE PICTURES on the next page, you see motorcyclists playing the game of "Whack the Murphy." It's one of the ways motorbike jockies—a fraternity that is rapidly expanding as new lightweight machines boom the popularity of motorcycling—spend a Sunday afternoon in the country.

Members of the Bedford Motorcycle Club of Brooklyn, N. Y., demonstrated the game for PARADE readers. Each rider ties a balloon to his head, then takes his place in a circle. At a signal from the referee the players start riding, following each other fender to fender. Still circling, they increase speed. Then the whacking begins.

With knotted scarves or rolls of paper, players take roundhouse swings at the bobbing balloons in front of them. When a rider's balloon is knocked off (see photograph at lower right), he retires from the game. After spills, locked wheels and occasional runaway bikes, the last man flying a balloon on his head is declared the winner.

Motorcycle club members don't limit themselves to games like "Whack the Murphy," however. They stage hill-climbs, potato races and speed contests down sandy stretches at 110 miles per hour on their heavy, "iron-horse" bikes.

That's too fast for most people, who figure that riding a big, heavy bike at that speed is just an easy way to break a neck. But U.S. motorcycle makers have found a heavy demand for powerful "iron horses" among speed-conscious riders. Until recently the motorcycle makers apparently thought the rest of the population would rather do all their riding in automobiles.

LIGHTWEIGHTS HIT U.S. MARKET

British and continental bike makers, however, had different ideas. Lightweight bikes had long been popular in Europe. When the tariff was reduced in 1946, lightweights started rolling into the U.S. and immediately put many of the "auto riders" into saddles.

These lightweights became so popular that American bike makers told their engineers

Lightweight models boost bike-riding to record heights of popularity; a zany new game helps to design lightweight motorcycles that would offer competition. Now with even more light bikes being imported from dollar-hungry Europe, 1949 looks like a boom year for motorcycle riders and makers alike.

The Panther and the Czech Jawa are typical of the foreign lightweights, popular for 30 years in Europe, but "not powerful enough," said some American designers, for the U.S. rider. The British and continental bike makers have proved that the Americans were only partly right. It was true that many experienced U.S. drivers preferred, and still prefer, the faster heavyweights. But many other Americans, most of them new riders, appear to be willing to sacrifice speed for a light, easy-to-handle bike which costs $100 to $500 less than a heavy.

British manufacturers claim that their bikes reach higher speeds from a smaller cylinder capacity than American bikes. However, the lightweights still aren't fast enough for many experienced U.S. bike jockies. Says one member of Bedford Club: "I'll still take my 'heavy' with its 100-to-110-miles-per-hour top speed to a lightweight which can't get past 80. The lightweights are fine for a new rider — or for a person who isn't concerned about high speeds—but I am."

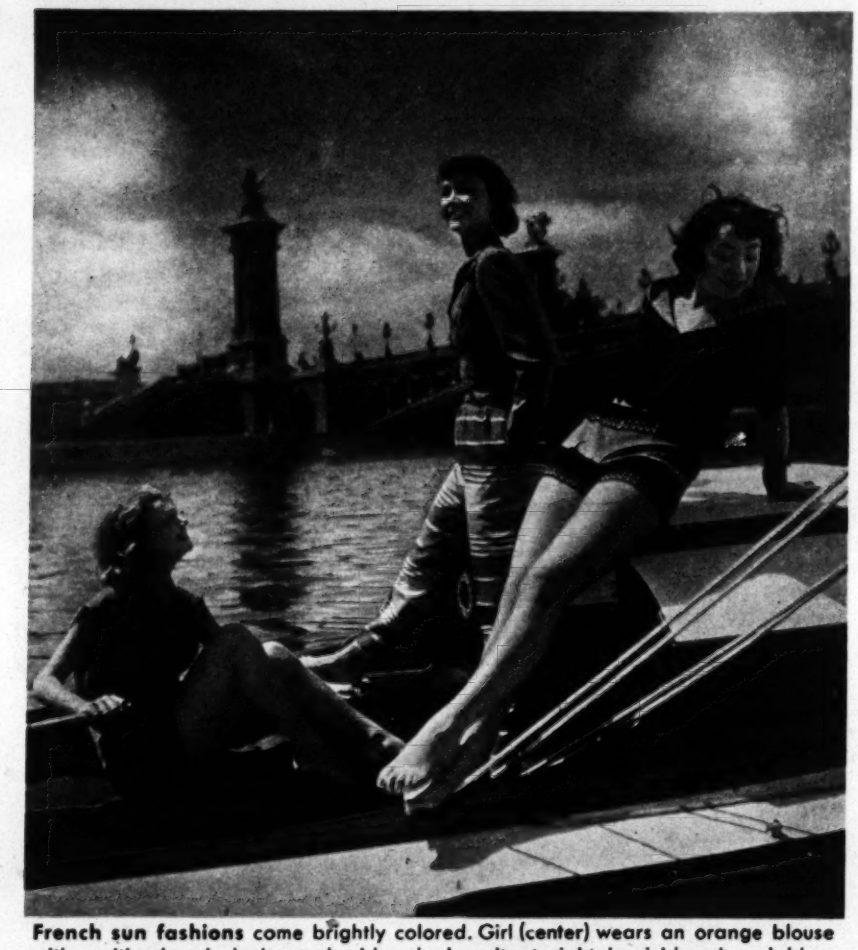
HEAVY PRODUCTION

Meanwhile, production figures underscore the seriousness with which both of the largest U.S. companies are cultivating the lightweight market. Last year they turned out 22,000 lightweights to about 18,000 heavies; although neither company will reveal figures, observers estimate lightweight production will approach 30,000 this year while about 15,000 heavies roll off the motorcycle builders' assembly lines.

Manufacturers now realize that the foreign competition, most of it from England, was a blessing disguised in a Union Jack. In 1945 total U.S. bike registration was 197,920; but after the lightweights hit the U.S. it shot skyward to a record-breaking 434,741.

IMPRESSIVE in their uniforms, the Bedford Motorcycle Club riders (see text) set out for a field in the country where they play "Whack the Murphy."

Balloon goes flying off head of rider at left in "Whack the Murphy." Rider at right has spilled but both continue swinging knotted scarves at each other.



French sun fashions come brightly colored. Girl (center) wears an orange blouse with multi-colored slacks; embroidered playsuit at right is vivid red and blue.

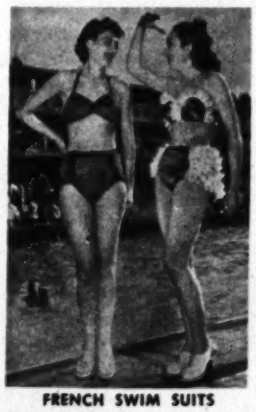
France's Modest New Playsuits

Paris comes up with conservative new designs

WITH BOTH SIDES of the Atlantic embroiled in a summer argument over France's "naked" swimming suits, the pictures on these pages show a surprising thing that has been happening —almost unnoticed—to French playsuits.

While designers have been stripping more and more cloth away from bathing costumes, the cloth thus saved seems to be showing up — with compound interest — in that other popular beach accessory, the playsuit. In Paris and in Cannes this season, playsuits are chaste, sunproof, even voluminous. The novel designs, along with emphasis on unusual colors (orange, tangerine and vivid shades of blue, green and red) are bound to have an effect on the design of U.S. leisure wear next season.

The "cover-up" playclothes are in startling contrast to the Bikini, or Riviera - type, navel - revealing swim suits much favored by French girls. The latter, made of wisps of material, have drawn stares from U.S. men, criticism from U.S. women. ("You won't catch me in one of them." — Betty Grable.)



FRENCH SWIM SUITS

Compared to American playsuits, the clothes shown here are generally more formal and elegant. Many are elaborately embroidered with sequins and gold thread. Full-length and three-quarter sleeves are seen on many, and collars are enormous.

Jacques Heim, Andre Ledoux, Carven and Jacques Charles designed the fashions shown here. They're labelled for sailing, tennis, outdoor parties and mild sun-bathing.

Chocolate Chiffon Pie

CARNATION'S SUMMER SPECIAL

1 cup vanilla wafer crumbs
3 tablespoons melted butter
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
¼ cup cold water
⅔ cup hot chocolate syrup
1 cup Carnation Milk, chilled to ice-crystal stage
¼ teaspoon mint extract or ½ teaspoon vanilla extract
Shaved chocolate

Mix crumbs and butter; press firmly into deep 9-inch or regular 10-inch buttered pie plate. Chill 1 hour. Soften gelatin in water; dissolve in hot syrup; chill until mixture is cold, but not thickened. Whip Carnation Milk until it stands in peaks; fold in flavoring and chocolate mixture. Pour into crumb crust. Chill until firm. Decorate with shaved chocolate. Serves 6 to 8.

H. L. MENCKEN: THE STAG AT EVE

By Frank DeBlois

AT 68, H. L. MENCKEN is a much-mellowed but still salty old Baltimorean who likes to think of himself as having reached the age of Olympian reflection.

There once was a day, however, when Mencken was a far more disorderly fellow. In his heyday he was denounced more thoroughly and abused more enthusiastically than any other man of his time and the mere mention of his name customarily threw prohibitionists, pedagogues and preachers into semi-incoherent fits of rage. But Mencken always came back with twice as much as he took.

To many Americans the recent publication of *A Mencken Chrestomathy ("a collection of choice passages") recalls the days when Mencken was at his sassiest. For in it is the language he used in his magazines, "The Smart Set" and the original "American Mercury," and in his six books of Prejudices which contained his dissections of everyone and everything from William Jennings Bryan to Baltimore oysters.

STILL HAS SKEPTIC'S EYE

Of Bryan, for instance, he wrote: "He is a tedious fraud and ignoramous, a cheap rogue and hypocrite"; and of oysters: "Food for the Gods, indeed."

In his Chrestomathy, which is his compilation of Menckeniana now out of print, Mencken looks skeptically at politics and statecraft, at literature, the arts, philosophy, religion, and his own behaviour.

He was born in Baltimore, September 12, 1880, the first son of an autocratic cigar maker who envisioned a successful career in tobacco for his heir.

But the youthful Mencken almost immediately developed ideas of his own. Educated in private schools and at the Baltimore Polytechnic but "spared the humiliation of a college education," he began to write at 12, turned to poetry and musical composition at 15 and went to work as a reporter on the Baltimore Morning Herald at 17. By 1903, when he was 23, he was city editor of the Herald and had published his first book, Ventures Into Verse. Two years later he was editor of the Sunday Herald and the author of a tome explaining the works of George Bernard Shaw to the "Neanderthal rabble of the Bible Belt." In 1906 he joined the staff of the Baltimore Sun and became literary editor of "Smart Set."

In 1914, Mencken, by this time a plump-cheeked and chubby-faced man with a boiled and watery eye, became a national figure. With George Jean Nathan he was made editor of "Smart Set" and he immediately began to make himself heard. Within a year the whole country knew that Mencken liked Beethoven, beer and Baltimore; disliked prohibition, the American farmer and "the leathery delicatessen" of the average housewife's cuisine. And ten years later, when, with Nathan and Alfred A. Knopf, he founded the American Mercury he had become the most influential—and the most reviled—figure in contemporary American letters.

"I will content myself with the bald statement that he is a weasel," one of his critics observed at that time.

From his office at the "Mercury," Mencken beamed happily down on his detractors and every month he filled his magazine with mocking laughter.

BLASTED TRADITIONS

He blasted the polite traditions of his day and lustily championed all those who defied the mass-accepted fashions of the times. He swung from the floor at ignorance, vulgarity, sentimentality and evasion, and he lambasted Babbitts, club-men, businessmen and reformers alike.

He had a low opinion, but a certain tolerance of his fellow man, an attitude that often drove his critics into spasms of anger.

"Man, at his best," he wrote, "remains a one-lunged animal, never completely rounded and perfect as a cockroach, say, is perfect."

"Mencken," replied the Jackson, Miss., News, "is a howling hyena."

"No moral man," wrote Mencken, "has ever painted a picture worth looking at, or written a symphony worth hearing or a book worth reading, and it is highly improbable that the thing has ever been done by a virtuous woman."

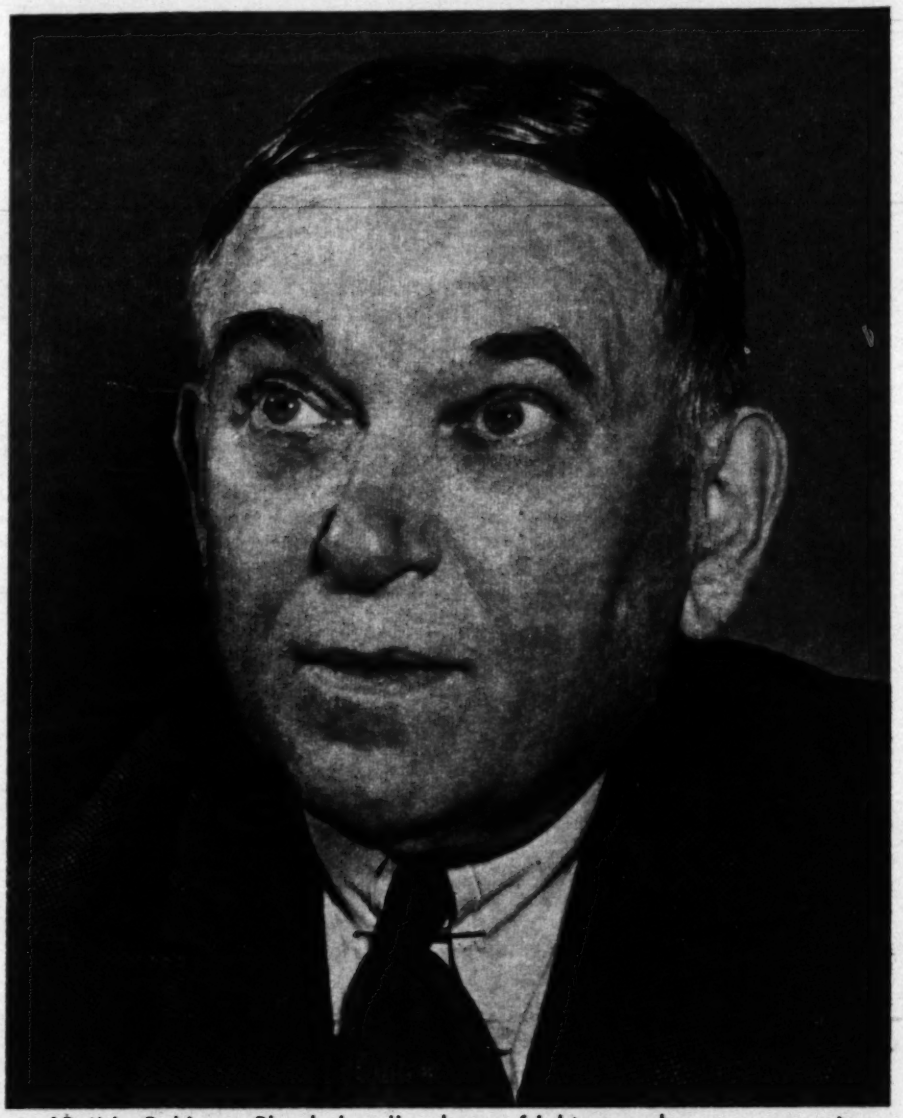
"This maggot," growled the Tampa, Fla., Times in reply, "this ghoul of new-made graves, this buzzard!"

Throughout these years Mencken's extra-curricular output was keeping pace with his work at the Mercury. In 1917 he published his Defense of Women in which he said: "When women kiss it always reminds me of prizefighters shaking hands."

A bachelor and a satirist of the institution of marriage ("no man is genuinely happy, married, who has to drink worse whiskey than he used to drink when he was single"), he married at the age of 50. Mrs. Mencken died in 1935 and today Mencken, who is in poor health, lives with a bachelor brother in Baltimore.

Looking back, he finds it difficult to explain what it was that made him so effective as a scourge. In his Crestomathy he insists that at heart he is a mild man who is mad at no one at all and is filled with the peace of the just.

"If," he murmurs in the Chrestomathy, "you ever remember me and have thought to please my ghost, forgive some sinner and wink your eye at a homely girl."



At 68, "the Baltimore Blunderbuss" no longer frightens pedagogues or pastors.

*"A Mencken Chrestomathy," by H. L. Mencken, 627 pages, published by Alfred A. Knopf, New York; $5.

As critic, lexicographer and observer of the native scene, Mencken led American literary revolution of the 1920s. Deaf to abuse and praise, he most enjoyed playing the piano, in his red suspenders.

At eight, he posed on garden wall. A cigar-maker's son, he spurned his father's business.

At 23, he published first book, Ventures Into Verse. Now a collectors' item, he calls it "dreadful stuff."

At 44, with George Jean Nathan (left) he founded "The American Mercury," became bad boy of U.S. letters. Today his life in Baltimore is interrupted only infrequently by visits to Nathan in New York.

Farm team's main argument was that childhood spent close to nature in the country is the best preparation anyone can have for a healthy, happy, life as an active adult.

PARADE ROUND TABLE

WHAT'S BEST FOR KIDS:

Farm and city folk debate advantages of

Each team made telling points but failed

By FAITH TERRY and JAMES B. GOLDEN

WHICH IS THE BEST PLACE for a child to grow up —the city or the country?

In search of answers to this question, which arises for millions of U.S. parents, PARADE and the Toledo (Ohio) Blade put the problem to eight people between the ages of 15 and 55—four of them from the city and four from the country. For two hours, in a friendly round table conference in the Blade's offices, they fought it out. In the course of the debate they probed a good many angles that hold interest for all parents.

It was more than a discussion: it was a real argument, city vs. country. For one of the requirements of every participant was that he must be convinced —without qualification—that his was the best way of life. Some arguments were cold and logical; others ran warm with emotion. Some involved education, economics, social life, art, opportunity. Others involved such considerations as health, business training—and simple happiness.

On the "city team" were:

Lee E. Harbottle, 42, former teacher, now a Boy Scout Executive in Toledo. He has one son.

Mrs. Emil Tschirret, Jr., 42, also a former teacher, who now operates a Toledo restaurant. She has two sons.

John Claerhout, 20, sophomore at the University of Toledo, who works as a salesman in his spare time.

Joanne Matyok, 16, vocational high school student who is studying retail merchandising.

On the "country team" were:

James Metcalf, 55, farm editor of the Blade for the last 20 years. He has two grown children.

Mrs. Robert Warns, 36, of Walbridge, O., a registered nurse who knew nothing of farm life until her marriage in 1942. She has three small children.

Miss Frances Ziegler, 19, of Tiffin, O., born and raised on a farm, one year of college, now working as a milk tester.

William Witker, 15, of Swanton, O., a high school junior. Toledo-born but farm raised.

It was the city team that led with the offensive. Its members at once fired their biggest argument: children, they felt, have a much better chance of obtaining a good education in the city. Mrs. Tschirret began it:

"I speak as a school teacher and as a mother," she said. "The curriculum is unquestionably broader in a city school. A child has opportunities to sample so many more things. And he has a better chance to go on to higher education."

City-dweller Claerhout, the salesman-sophomore, took up the argument. He, too, felt that "the Little Red Brick School' which still exists in many parts of the country simply cannot offer adequate curricular advantages." "Many country children," he said, "will go to the cities to live. That brings up the question, can the country schools give them the right background for city life?"

An answer to that one came quickly from Mrs. Warns, "I don't think that's an argument at all," she said. "As for curricula, as many scholarships are won in rural schools as in city schools. Our students get more attention—and take more interest in their studies—because their classes are smaller."

City Student Joanne Matyok demurred. "Perhaps the city schools are more crowded," she said, "but there are still only 16 girls in my class at vocational school. And our teachers are very close to us."

HARD-HEADED VIEW

Farm editor Metcalf took a hard-headed view. He told about a country boy who was going to a rural high school while financially interested, in a small way, in a few farm projects. "This is a practical opportunity that few city schools can offer," he said. "Every country school is a real vocational school. A student studies farming and it becomes his way of life. He works with tools, mechanized equipment and animals. All through his school years he gets as good a vocational education as any city school could possibly give him.

"By the time the farm boy in question graduates from high school," Metcalf said, "he will have about $1,800 in the bank. And so he'll start life right. He's ready to begin life as a farmer, and he doesn't have to go to college if he doesn't want to. He has moderator Faith Terry, and the city team: Lee E. Harbottle, Mrs. Emil Tschirret, Jr., John Claerhout and Joanne Matyok. The debate took place in Toledo, Ohio.

THE CITY OR COUNTRY?

rural environment as against city training.

to budge the other side in its convictions.

City team argued that an urban center is the best place to prepare children for a well-informed, well-adjusted adulthood, because of bigger schools, museums, there.

already learned about planting and farming. He has studied farm accounts and business accounts which give him the equivalent of a two-year course in business college.

"In other words he is able to transact business when he gets out of high school."

Editor Metcalf finished talking with a feeling that he had scored a point.

Then city-student Claerhout resumed the debate.

"I don't want to sound like a city slicker," he said, "but I do think that social development, character building, citizenship training, are more available in the city—"

He was pounced on from all sides by the farm section. Heatedly, Miss Ziegler exclaimed: "Why, that's why we have the Grange, the Four-H Club, the Farm Councils, the Y's! All of these are working to give our children just those advantages — and it shows up!"

Mrs. Warns broke in: "Yes, and farm boys and girls learn something else—how to carry responsibilities."

Student-farmer Witker endorsed Miss Ziegler's statement. "And not only that — because our social events and club activities are so often out-of-doors, we get much more healthful enjoyment out of them.

Said Mrs. Warns: "Certainly you could not be closer to nature than on a farm. Our children grow up surrounded by a peaceful quietness that you do not have in the city."

"Yes, life in the city is faster," Miss Matyok retorted. "That's why it's so much more stimulating."

"City boys," Mrs. Warns continued, "are not as strong as farm boys. When they come out to work they don't last long. On a tractor they're tired after two hours. A farm boy can handle one all day long."

Again, the country side seemed to have scored. But Mrs. Tschirret questioned the value of being able to work a tractor all day long. "My boys," she said, "come home late from school every afternoon after 'working'—if you want to call it that—at baseball and swimming. The point I want to make is this—they are tired, but they've been doing what they want to do!

WHAT ABOUT CHORES?

Practical farm editor Metcalf, grinning, admitted that not all farm youngsters like their chores. "But it's good for them," he insisted. "Moreover, they supplement chores with many sports."

Young farmer Witker reinforced that argument. "Sure," he said, "I've got my work to do but I get in plenty of sports! I believe we have as much, if not more, fun on the farm than kids in the city."

And so the give and take went. Mrs. Warns contended that farm life meant a closer relationship between parent and child. Mrs. Tschirret remarked that youngsters in crowded cities learn better how to get along with each other.

Even the city's "well-stocked" library was matched against the country's "traveling library." One is bigger but the other comes right up to your door. The cultural advantages of a city such as Toledo were cited: "its opportunities for good music—and the theatre, and its excellent art museum."

However, young Witker innocently observed: "I don't believe you could see a prettier picture than the woods, the rolling land and the beauty of a farm. When you have all that you don't have to go to an art museum!"

In summing up the city's arguments, Mr. Harbottle listed four ends parents should have in mind in bringing up children: (1) reverence for God, (2) respect for country, (3) vocational guidance, and (4) physical fitness.

"It is much easier to accomplish these things in the city than the country," he said.

Mrs. Warns disagreed. "Everything considered," she said, "we have more lasting, substantial advantages. Our children lead a healthier, happier, fuller life. We are completely happy."

There was one thing, however, that neither side brought up; that, come the nice weather each year, thousands of city dwellers—youngsters and oldsters alike—can hardly wait to get out of town to the cool, green quiet of the countryside, and that the farmer, intent on a really big time, will make a bee-line for the great big, crowded city.

In the end, Editor Metcalf was philosophical. "What with electrification, mechanization, television and everything else," he said, "ten or twenty years from now there'll probably be very little difference between the country kid and the city kid anyhow!"

POLICE CAR had hurriedly backed away, now rushes forward to attempt rescue as plane crashes and instantly bursts into flame.

Flame spurts at moment of impact

THE PHOTOGRAPH above, here published for the first time, is one of the most extraordinary ever made of an airplane accident. It is one of the few ever taken at the moment of a crash, and it is notable, also, because it shows a deadly little spurt of flame already blazing.

Photographer George Jervas, one of the cameramen regularly on duty at La Guardia airport in New York, took the picture just before the end of the war, but withheld it from publication on his own initiative because it involved an Army plane. Two civilian airplane mechanics decided to try to take up a C-47 for an unauthorized hop. Their troubles began in the air. "The plane flew crazily over the field," Jervas said, "and I grabbed my camera. After a 20-minute wait, we saw him coming in again, rocking like a bubble in the wind. He approached, undershot the field, bounced once and went up on his nose. The plane burned and both men in it were killed."

A moment later fire engulfs plane. Policemen leave their car, which has bogged down in mud, and are running to reach wreck.

Harpo Marx casts an eye at blond Vera-Ellen as she prepares for a ballet number. Her style is a sparkling stage combination of acrobatic dancing, tap and ballet.

Success Story

Little Miss Perpetual Motion whirled into fame on one of Major Bowes' programs

WHAT HAPPENS to people who win amateur contests?

One of them, the tiny dancer who goes by the stage name of Vera-Ellen, found herself embarked on an unexpected career when she was awarded a prize on the Major Bowes Hour back in 1937. Today she's the blond firecracker who danced the sensational "Slaughter on Tenth Avenue" ballet in M-G-M's "Words and Music."

After her Bowes' success in '37, the ambitious little tap-dancer from Cincinnati was sent on tour with one of the late Major's entertainment units. Her first taste of theatrical life was so enthralling that she abandoned plans to become a dance teacher.

Tiny as she is (she's five feet, four, weighs 111 pounds), she also can be as determined as a bill collector. In her first Broadway break—auditioning for Billy Rose—she refused to do the customary chorus girl time-step and kick. Either she would show Mr. Rose her full routine—tap, toe, ballet and acrobatic dancing—or she'd go home.

Three weeks' later, she opened in Rose's night club with her own specialty number.

From night club performances to musicals was a quick step for Miss Vera-Ellen Rohe. (That's her real name). She twinkle-toed her way through five hit shows, then at last Hollywood crooked a finger.

SHE'LL DANCE AGAIN WITH KELLY

Between 1945 and 1948, Vera-Ellen appeared in one picture a year. But this year, her fans are going to see her spectacular dancing in two films. One, called "Love Happy," finds her cast with Harpo Marx. The other, "On The Town," reunites her with Gene Kelly, with whom she danced "Slaughter."

BAMBI HAS TWINS AGAIN

Michigan kids' pet deer presents them with her third set of fawns

IT'S HAPPENED AGAIN: Bambi, the gentle, slim-legged doe who came out of the woods to live with Farmer John Fick's children has just had her third set of twins: Jack and John.

On a cool June morning in 1945, a tiny fawn became entangled in a wire fence on the Fick farm, near Swartz Creek, Mich. Back in the woods beyond the fence she had become separated from her mother. But miracles happen, even to frightened fawns, and so she was found, not by roving dogs, but by two excited children.

Shirley Fick, 11, and Jack, 7, her brother, soothed the fawn, freed her, and took her home to be bottle-fed. They named her Bambi.

Bambi grew fast, became friends not only with all the nearby farmers but with their dogs. She roamed in and out of the woods, and always returned. Then one day early in 1947 she disappeared. It was mating season, and the Ficks wondered if she would ever return.

THE FIRST TWINS ARRIVE

Bambi did return, and in a "nursery" in the Fick's barn she presented them with her first twins: Falene and Doelene. The twins grew, but trouble was ahead. One day Doelene scampered into a mowing machine and, hurt and frightened, hobbled into the woods. Bambi was gone for days searching for her, and farmers scoured the woods for both. One day Bambi came back alone.

In 1948 (PARADE, Aug. 22, '48) Bambi had twins again: Shirleen and Francene. Later these, and Falene, too, disappeared. Now it's happened again. When Bambi returned to the farm this summer, after the mating season, the Ficks had the "nursery" ready. Bambi's new twins will have the run of the farm—and will be free to roam the woods out of which their mother first came to the Ficks. A deer's life is a dangerous life, but in all the fields and woods which spread to Michigan's horizon, farmers this year will do their best to watch out for the safety of Bambi's latest twins.

Shirley Fick holds latest twins, which look just like Bambi did when kids found her in fence.

Happy family: Bambi, John (left) and Jack. Bambi probably will take them back to woods for nursing.

Neighbors, who all know Bambi, flock to Fick's farm to see the new twins. Farmer Fick holds fawn John.

STEVE CANYON

MILTON CANIFF

THIS IS THE MISSION!...WE THINK THE REBEL ENGINEERS ARE BUILDING EXPERIMENTAL SUBMARINE PENS AT ONE OF THE CHINA COAST CITIES!... THE AREA IS WELL GUARDED — BUT A FAST PHOTO AIRPLANE COULD BRING BACK PICTURES...

IT'S A LONG RUN, BUT BY USING WING TANKS AND REFUELING AT A PREARRANGED SECRET BASE, IT CAN BE DONE...

THE REBELS HAVE SPIES WATCHING-SO YOU FOUR WILL TAKE OFF ON DIFFERENT COMPASS HEARINGS! ONLY ONE WILL HIT THE TARGET...THAT WILL BE OLEY LEY! WE'LL GIVE OLEY SEALED ORDERS AS TO WHICH PORT TO GO TO!... ANY QUESTIONS?

WELL, CANYON HANDED OLEY THE TOUGHEST JOB AGAIN!

IF HE KEEPS AT IT, CANYON WILL HAVE SUMMER SMITH FOR HIMSELF IN NO TIME AT ALL!

WE'RE TO RIG OLEY LEY'S WAGON FOR A RED-HOT PHOTO JOB — WING TANKS, TOO!

EVEN IF OLEY BAILS OUT, HE'LL BE SO DEEP IN REBEL TERRITORY CANYON WILL HAVE A LONG TIME TO MAKE THE BIG PLAY FOR SUMMER SMITH!

OLEY, HONEY, I FOUND SOME MELONS AT THE MARKET — I--- HEY, PODNUH WHAT'S WRONG?

I CAN'T HIDE STUFF FROM YOU, SUMMER — THE BOYS THINK CANYON IS GIVING ME THE DANGEROUS JOBS SO HE CAN MAKE TIME WITH YOU!

OH, OLEY — YOU'RE TOO SMART TO BE TAKEN IN BY THAT HANGAR TALK... STEVE IS A NICE GUY — BUT IT'S YOU I LOVE! KISS ME, SWEET!

I HAVE TO ADMIT IT ALL SEEMS DIFFERENT FROM HERE!

MEANWHILE...

YOU WILL PLEASE TO DELIVER TO HOUSE OF MISS SUMMER SMITH!

HEY, SUMMER — THERE'S A BOY HERE WITH A PACKAGE — AND A NOTE FOR YOU!

I'M PUTTING ON MY FACE, DEAR — OPEN IT AND READ THE NOTE TO ME!

...IT'S A BOX OF CANDY — AND THE NOTE READS..." HOW SLOWLY DRAG THE HOURS BY UNTIL THAT WHICH KEEPS US TWAIN WILL FALL AWAY AND WE SHALL BE AS ONE AGAIN... SIGNED - STEVE"

MARK TRAIL

AT SUNDOWN ON THE DESERT, A TINY ELF OWL LEAVES HIS HOME IN A GIANT CACTUS...

AND STARTS A SEARCH FOR FOOD...

AS HE POUNCES ON A BIG JUICY GRASSHOPPER, HE IS SUDDENLY IMPRISONED...

IN THE JAWS OF A DESERT FOX, WHO TAKES THE STILL FORM TO HER DEN...

FOR THE FIVE KITS TO DINE ON...

AS SHE PROUDLY WATCHES HER YOUNG FIGHTING OVER WHO GETS FIRST BITE...

PIXIE PUZZLE ADVENTURIES

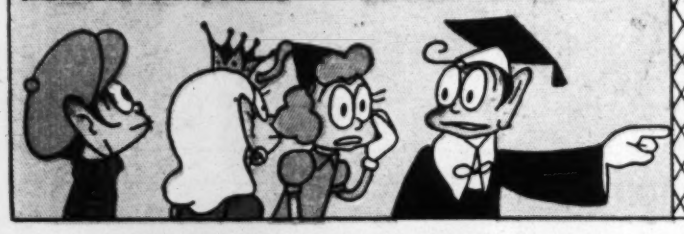
by Matt Curzon

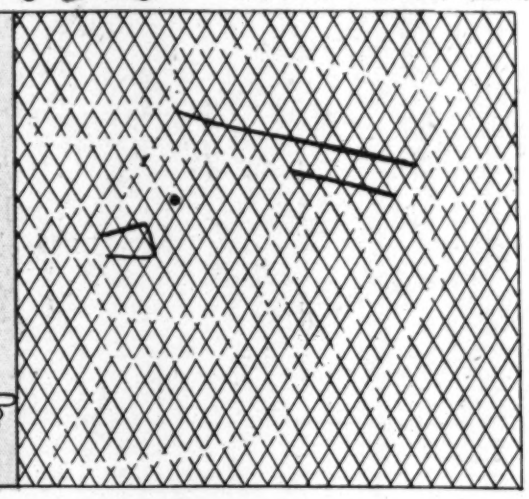
Copyright, 1949, New York Herald Tribune Inc

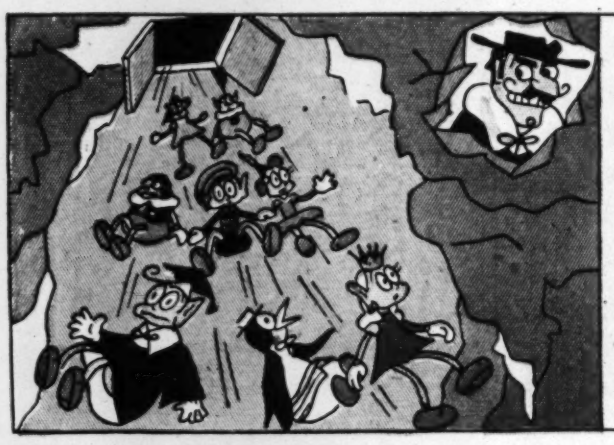
TRAPPED IN THE HAUNTED HOUSE, THE BRAVE BUT CAUTIOUS PIXIES SLOWLY PAVE THEIR WAY TO CAPTURE THE ICE CREAM RECIPE THIEF.

1 MAISIE CRIES, "SPUNKY IS MISSING!" WIZZIE LOOKS AROUND AND SAYS: "THE THIEF KIDNAPPED HIM, I SEE HIS FACE ON THE DOOR."

DO YOU WANT TO SEE THE THIEF'S FACE? DRAW A LINE FROM THE DOT THROUGH EACH GAP FROM SQUARE TO SQUARE.







FALSE _____
BITTER _____
COWARD _____
COLD _____
CRUEL _____
DULL _____
BIG _____ HATEFUL _____ ENEMY _____

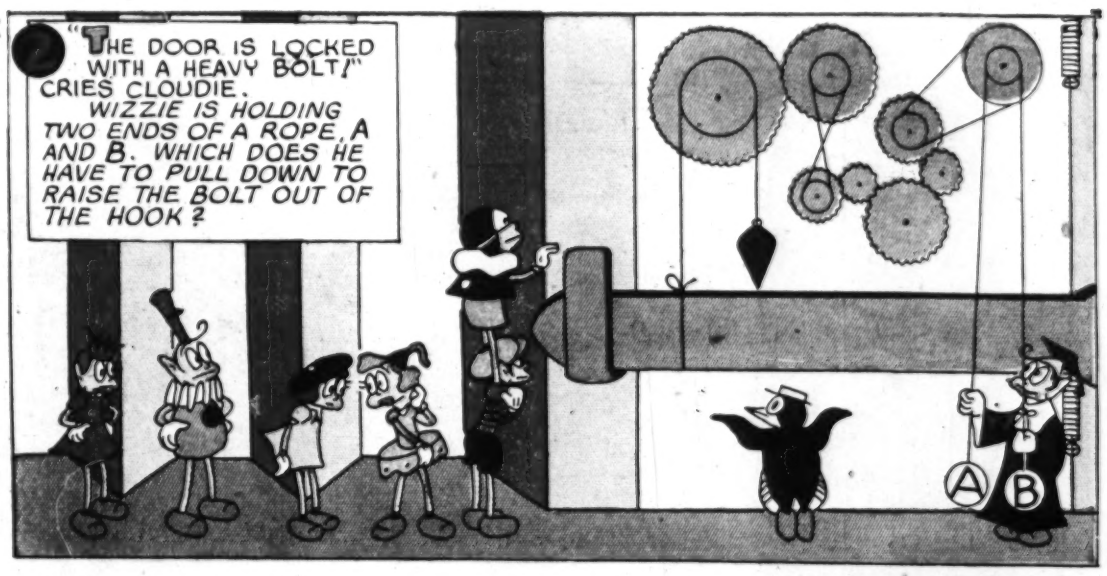
3 THE THIEF LAUGHS TO HIMSELF: "HA HA! THEY OPENED THE DOOR BUT THEY'LL END UP IN MY SUPER TRAP."

THE THIEF IS BAD, THE PIXIES ARE GOOD. HE IS TALL, THEY ARE SHORT.

THE LIST OF WORDS ON YOUR LEFT DESCRIBES THE THIEF. USE OPPOSITE WORDS TO DESCRIBE THE PIXIES.

2 "THE DOOR IS LOCKED WITH A HEAVY BOLT!" CRIES CLOUDIE.

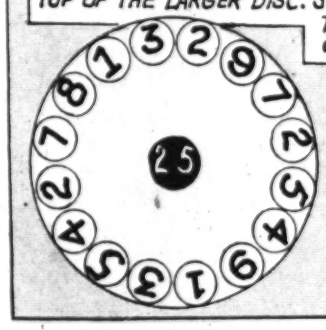
WIZZIE IS HOLDING TWO ENDS OF A ROPE, A AND B. WHICH DOES HE HAVE TO PULL DOWN TO RAISE THE BOLT OUT OF THE HOOK?

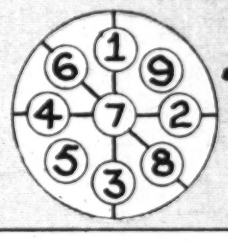


4 THE THIEF HAVING TRAPPED THE PIXIES, TRIES TO MAKE HIS GETAWAY AND FINDS THE DOOR LOCKED! "BAH!" SNARLS THE THIEF, "THE PIXIES LOCKED THIS DOOR WITH A COMBINATION LOCK. NOW HOW AM I GOING TO GET OUT?"

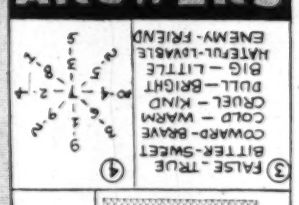
DON'T LET THE THIEF SEE THE WAY YOU WORK IT OUT.

THE KEY NUMBER IS 25. CUT OUT THE SMALL DISC. PLACE IT ON TOP OF THE LARGER DISC. STICK A PIN THROUGH THE CENTER. REVOLVE THE SMALL DISC UNTIL THE FOUR ROWS OF 5 NUMBERS EACH ADD UP TO 25.





PUZZLE ANSWERS



3 FALSE - TRUE
BITTER - SWEET
COWARD - BRAVE
COLD - WARM
CRUEL - KIND
DULL - BRIGHT
BIG - LITTLE HATEFUL - LOVABLE ENEMY - FRIEND

Prince Valiant

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

BY HAROLD R FOSTER

Synopsis: WHEN PEACEFUL DAYS COME TO TROUBLE CAMELOT, KING ARTHUR SENDS THE MOST TROUBLESOME KNIGHTS ON A MISSION UNDER PRINCE VALIANT. WHEN, IN THE FACE OF THE ENEMY, HE ORDERS RETREAT, THEY SCOFF AT HIM.

AND VAL SCOFFS RIGHT BACK: "GENTLEMEN, YOU ARE NOT AT A TOURNAMENT WHERE HEROIC DEEDS ARE DONE BEFORE THE ADMIRING EYES OF FAIR LADIES!"

THEN HIS MANNER CHANGES. "THIS IS BUSINESS," HE SNAPS. "RETREAT!"

ONCE OUT OF SIGHT OF THE ENEMY VAL BARKS HIS ORDERS, "RIDE TO YONDER HILL AND PREPARE TO DEFEND IT.... DO NOT UNSADDLE, BE READY TO RIDE AT MY SIGNAL!"

THEN TAKING YOUNG GEOFFREY WITH HIM, VAL FINDS A POINT FROM WHICH TO WATCH AND WAIT.

THE PICTS ARE WILY FIGHTING MEN. THEY PAINT THEMSELVES BLUE AND GREEN SO THEY CAN CROUCH, UNSEEN, AMONG THE HEATHER. BUT VAL'S RETREAT DRAWS THEM FROM THEIR AMBUSH TO FOLLOW, AND THEY COME SWARMING ACROSS THE HILL.

AND NOW THEIR NUMBER CAN BE SEEN. THIS IS NO MERE RAID, BUT A FULL SCALE INVASION THROUGH SOME BREECH IN "THE WALL!"

NEXT WEEK – Into Scotland.

YOU CAN'T ALWAYS TELL BY LOOKING

HMP! I SUPPOSE THE PLACE IS O. K., BUT I MUST SAY THIS IS THE COMMONEST-LOOKING BUNCH OF PEOPLE I EVER SET EYES ON!

I HOPED THIS TRIP WOULD HAVE A REFINING INFLUENCE ON SLUG, BUT HE'LL JUST REVERT TO TYPE HERE.

WELL, WE'RE HERE NOW, SO WE'LL JUST MAKE THE BEST OF IT. BUT I'M NOT GOING TO UNPACK ALL MY NEW CLOTHES FOR THIS GANG TO GAPE AT!

OUTSIDE INN

THAT'S THE SPIRIT, SUSIE! WE'LL BE AS COMMON AS THEY ARE, TONIGHT, AND THEN WE'LL MOVE ON TO SOME NICE PLACE IN THE MORNING!

THIS WAY, FOLKS! WE'VE GOT YOUR ROOMS ALL READY!

TAKE OFF YOUR HAT. THE KIDS AROUND HERE DON'T WEAR HATS

O.K! YOU TAKE IT OFF!

DON'T LOOK NOW, BESSIE, BUT THERE ARE SOME PRETTY NICE-LOOKING PEOPLE JUST COMING IN. MAYBE WE'D BETTER DOLL UP THIS AFTERNOON!

WE OUGHT TO FLY HOME, ALICE, AND TAKE OFF THESE RED UNDERSHIRTS

DON'T BE VULGAR!

O.K.

DID YOU HEAR THAT, GODFREY? PUT ON A SHIRT WHEN YOU COME IN FOR LUNCH!

GOSH, SUSIE! THEY ALL DRESSED UP!

FREDDIE, THIS IS GODFREY! HE'LL INTRODUCE YOU TO THE OTHER GUESTS.

DON'T LOOK NOW, BESSIE, BUT WE DIDN'T NEED TO DRESS UP

AND I SHAVED!

NOW THAT WE'VE GOT THE HAT BUSINESS SETTLED, MY NAME'S MYRTLE. WHAT'S YOUR NAME?
